Feds 'concerned' by CUNY's response to bias allegations

Civil rights probe eyed antisemitism, Islamophobia

BY CAYLA BAMBERGER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The U.S. Education Department, as part of a civil rights probe, identified Monday "concerns" about how the City University of New York investigated and responded to allegations of antisemitism and Islamophobia.

The nine complaints date to 2019-20, but also include the most recent school year, as campus tensions over the Israel-Hamas war erupted in the final weeks of the semester with a pro-Palestinian encampment and disruptions at graduations. Included in the probe were Hunter College, Brooklyn College, the CUNY School of Law, Queens College, Baruch College and CUNY's central offices.

The episodes included allegations that Jewish students at Hunter College were told they "should be listening, not speaking" during a discussion about the Middle East, a verbal assault on a Jewish person at Baruch College and pro-Palestinian students at Queens College saying they'd been called "terrorists."

With education officials still investigating, CUNY approached the Education Department about a voluntary agreement to increase training and reporting requirements, and reopen internal investigations into some of the complaints. For each, CUNY is required to provide investigators with their findings and next steps.

"Everyone has a right to learn in an environment free from discriminatory harassment based on who they are," U.S. Assistant Education Secretary for Civil Rights Catherine Lhamon said in a statement. "In fully executing the important commitments announced today, the City University of New York will ensure that its students may learn in the nondiscriminatory environment federal law promises to them."

The complaints against CUNY and an additional two cases at the University of Michigan are the first since Oct. 7 to be resolved by the Education Department, with more than 100 still pending at colleges and public school districts across the nation.

At Hunter, investigators confirmed that students and faculty in 2021 disrupted two required online classes "by commandeering the scheduled course discussion to use the class time to call for the decolonization of Palestine," according to a press release. At least one student left, and another testified that when Jewish students spoke or tried to contribute to the conversation, their classmates told them they "should be listening, not speaking."

City University of New York students and others at a pro-Palestinian protest outside the CUNY chancellor's office in Midtown last November. The Israel-Hamas war has sparked campus tensions.

Hunter, in its investigation, said the incident did not deny Jewish students access to education. But civil rights investigators called out the fact that CUNY did not directly interview any students in the class, leading education officials to conclude Hunter "could not have adequately evaluated what occurred in the sessions."

Over the past school year, more incidents that were still under investigation emerged. In November, a Baruch student attacked a Jewish person, shouting, "Jews are all s-t and need to die," just over a week before a large toilet paper swastika was found in a campus bathroom, according to press reports cited in the complaint.

Other cases alleged discrimination against Arab and Muslim students and pro-Palestinian students. CUNY Law this spring jettisoned its tradition of a student commencement address, after previous speakers who wore hijabs sparked public controversy over their criticism of Israel. At Queens College, pro-Palestinian students said they were verbally harassed and called names, such as "ISIS" and "terrorists," during a campus protest that the college failed to investigate.

"While [the federal Office for Civil Rights] investigation of these nine cases are in various stages of progress," education officials said in a letter to CUNY, the office "has determined that sufficient concerns identified in the investigation to date warrant comprehensive resolution now."

Kenneth Marcus, founder and chairman of the Louis D. Brandeis Center for Human Rights Under Law — which brought the complaint against CUNY for Jewish students — and a former head of the Office for Civil Rights, said Monday's announcement was a "welcome first step," but shows that CUNY is "far from finished with addressing these pervasive issues."

"Simply requiring CUNY to complete the internal investigations of antisemitic events on their campuses that should have been done thoroughly in the first place is not enough," he said. "Because [the Office for Civil Rights] didn't finish their investigation, they will need to work twice as hard on the monitoring and work very closely with CUNY."

An independent review of CUNY's antisemitism and discrimination policies and procedures, ordered last fall by Gov. Hochul, is ongoing, according to the university. More recently, seven CUNY colleges have been working with Hillel, a Jewish campus organization, to conduct surveys about how Jewish students feel on campus and will make recommendations by September.

"CUNY is committed to providing an environment that is free from discrimination and hate," CUNY Chancellor Felix Matos Rodriguez said in a statement, "and these new steps will ensure that there is consistency and transparency in how complaints are investigated and resolved."

This week expect to see fire hydrants unleashed like this one in Harlem during a heat wave last summer. Temperatures are forecast to be close to 100 on Friday.

HOT ENOUGH FOR YA?

Heat starts rolling in today, creeping into high 90s by Friday

BY JOSEPHINE STRATMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The city is bracing for scorching temperatures heading into the first official week of summer, with temperatures expected to climb starting Tuesday and reaching “feels like” temperatures of around 100 degrees on Thursday and Friday.

The National Weather Service is expected to issue a heat advisory for the five boroughs in effect from Thursday to Friday, the city activating its heat emergency plan Monday morning.

Cooling centers across the city will open Tuesday.

The hottest temperatures will hover around the high 80s to around 90 Tuesday, with the heat index, or “feels like” temperatures, in the lower 90s, according to David Stark, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service. Wednesday will be slightly warmer, with highs from 89 to 92 degrees and a heat index in the lower 90s.

The city will really heat up on Thursday when temperatures are expected to reach up to 94 degrees and the heat index reaching 100.

Friday will see highs in the upper 90s and a heat index of around 100 degrees.

There’s a chance Friday could set a new heat record for June 21— if the temperature goes past the 1988 record of 97 degrees.

Temperatures will begin to tick downward on Saturday, which is expected to see heat in the lower 90s. By Sunday, the heat is expected to break a bit, with temps back in the 80s.

The heat wave, the season’s first, comes earlier in the year than usual. Peak summer heat usually arrives in late July or August.

“We are about a month early,” Stark said. “That doesn’t necessarily mean that we’re going to see another one, but it is sort of prepping us for what what potentially could come.”

Mayor Adams, accompanied by extreme-weather czar Camille Joseph Varlack and other officials, urged city dwellers to check in on neighbors and told seniors and those with young children and pets to take extra precautions, stay in air conditioning and limit exposure to the sun.

Adams also cautioned that air quality could take a dive this week, in addition to the heat.

“This is extremely hot for June, and New Yorkers should not underestimate the heat,” Adams warned in a press conference on the heat on Monday.

“With climate change leading to more frequent and intense heat, summers are different than before, so we should expect and be prepared for the hot weather that is coming.”

Calling heat “the most dangerous weather phenomenon we have in New York City,” Commissioner of NYC Emergency Management Zach Iscol said that more than 350 New Yorkers a year on average die because of heat.

It will be hot throughout each day of the heat wave, with peak intensity forecasted to happen between noon and 8 p.m. each day, and temps won’t fall much at night, dipping to the 70s, Iscol said.

The city has expanded a network of cooling sites with air conditioning across the city, and “outdoor cool kits” will be handed out to outdoor workers, Adams said.

Beaches are open for the season, but public pools are not yet.

New Yorkers should limit their electricity consumption — avoiding running a load of laundry or blasting the air conditioning at max cool all day — in order to curb the risk of blackouts, officials advised.

BISHOP WHITEHEAD'S BLING DAYS ARE DONE

Brooklyn pastor & self-described friend of Mayor Adams is sentenced to nine years in prison for multiple scams

BY MOLLY CRANE-NEWMAN
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Lamor Whitehead, the politically connected Brooklyn pastor and self-described mentee of Mayor Adams dubbed the “Bling Bishop” for his flamboyant lifestyle, was sentenced to nine years in prison Monday for swindling a parishioner’s mother out of her life savings and other scams.

Manhattan Federal Judge Lorna Schofield handed down the term after hearing from financially destroyed victims. She also heard a final sermon from Whitehead, who waxed lyrical about “wisdom, integrity and love” and name-dropped a laundry list of city and state officials he’d dealt with — including the mayor, state Attorney General Letitia James, NYPD Chief of Department Jeffrey Maddrey and others, none of whom were in attendance.

Schofield, who also ordered Whitehead,

46, to pay $85,000 in restitution and forfeit $95,000, said Whitehead’s crimes were dishonest, “any one” of which “would warrant a substantial sentence.”

“I know you stated you’re remorseful, but I don’t see any remorse for your conduct,” Schofield said.

The judge said she’d read letters praising Whitehead’s positive impact as a church leader and a father, but she said they didn’t erase his fraud. She described the evidence as “frankly overwhelming” in one of the schemes that saw him submit fraudulent applications to obtain millions of dollars in loans. She said she believed he’d perjured himself when he took the stand, and that she was troubled by the nature of his crimes mirroring those he was convicted of decades ago.

“You don’t seem to have an appreciation of the impact of your crimes or, in some ways, the facts,” the judge said.

A jury on March 11 convicted Whitehead of wire fraud, attempted extortion, lying to the FBI and other charges for a series of schemes starting in 2018 that saw him bilk tens of thousands of dollars from unsuspecting victims.

Jurors heard from Pauline Anderson, who said Whitehead persuaded her son, a volunteer at his church, Leaders of Tomorrow International Ministries in Canarsie, Brooklyn, to trust him with at least $85,000 of her retirement savings to buy and renovate a fixer-upper home. The feds presented evidence showing the preacher spent the cash on designer clothing, his BMW, Grubhub and Foot Locker.

Anderson, 58, in court Monday, said Whitehead’s theft of her savings had led to emotional, physical and financial turmoil, telling the court, “What I was left with was nothing.”

The Brooklyn woman tearfully said she’d had many sleepless nights and that the incident “broke my heart, my spirit and my soul.”

Anderson’s son Rasheed Anderson said his mother was a matriarch figure to her extended family, who dedicated her life to her kids as a single mom, working to obtain her nursing degree in their native Jamaica before moving to New York.

He said her goal was always to save enough to buy her own home, a dream she toiled tirelessly toward for years that Whitehead ripped away in an instant.

“It hurts me as her son to see her like this,” he said. “We have been emotionally devastated.”

In asking the judge to impose a substantial sentence, Assistant U.S. Attorney Derek Wikstrom said Whitehead — who’s been convicted five times — was a con man who abused his churchgoers’ trust and carried out his crimes as part of a pattern that continued throughout the trial and reflected "how calculated this was."

Lamor Whitehead, aka the "Bling Bishop," displays sunny disposition last month downtown outside federal courthouse where he was sentenced Monday for multiple ripoffs.

The prosecutor said Whitehead's remorse was so lacking that he continued to torment his victims in lawsuits to silence them and shift the blame in an "abuse of the legal system."

"He purports to be a religious leader while stealing from people," Wikstrom said. "It's outrageous."

Whitehead, wearing beige prison clothing and shackles around his ankles, vigorously shook his right leg throughout the proceeding. He stood at the courtroom podium and spoke for around 20 minutes before the term was handed down, with the judge interrupting him at one point to say it wasn't an opportunity to retry the case.

Whitehead said he'd endured barbaric treatment at the Metropolitan Detention Center, where he said he'd showered only four times in the past month and was given rotten milk. The pastor's bail was revoked in May after the feds accused him of violating a restraining order and trying to peddle sealed documents online.

The father of four said he couldn't speak with his kids on Father's Day due to a lockdown at Brooklyn's federal jail.

"They need their father in their life," Whitehead said, saying he knew what it meant not to grow up with a dad in pleading with the judge for no prison time and to let him be "the poster child of another chance."

Rattling off a list of initiatives he's been involved in and elected officials he'd worked with, Whitehead said he'd participated in "untold turkey giveaways" and that the jury didn't get to see "who the real Bishop Lamor Whitehead was." He said he was innocent but still remorseful for "the heartbreak" suffered by the Anderson family.

"As far as remorse, I'm very remorseful. I hate to see anyone hurt," he said, later adding, "Your Honor, I am an honorable man."

Whitehead's defense attorney Dawn Florio said she would appeal immediately. In court, she described her client's tough upbringing in poverty and his father's killing by the NYPD when he was 6 months old. She said he suffered from complex posttraumatic stress disorder as a result of several disturbing experiences, including being stabbed on campus as a college student and held up at gunpoint in a live-streamed sermon in 2022.

Florio said her client maintained that the feds targeted him because of his close relationship with the mayor, who's known the convicted pastor since his days as Brooklyn borough president.

Jurors heard how the headline-grabbing pastor dangled his ties to Adams to squeeze Brandon Belmonte for a $500,000 real estate investment. He told the Bronx businessman that Adams was his "key to the city," recordings in evidence showed, and could help them lift stop-work orders on a property they were talking about buying together.

Whitehead, who's described Adams as his "mentor" and "brother," claimed that the FBI had pressured him to "help us get the mayor of New York" when he took the stand.

The feds, probing Adams' 2021 campaign in an unrelated investigation, did not accuse the mayor of wrongdoing in the case.

Asked for his reaction Monday, the mayor wished Whitehead well.

"Bishop Whitehead is in my prayers, and I wish the best for him."

A 22-year-old woman fatally stabbed last week in Hell's Kitchen was a doting mom whose 2-year-old daughter has been wondering about her since then, the victim's heartbroken family said Monday.

"She was asking my uncle, 'Where's Mommy?' All the family is getting together, and I'm sure she understands they're crying for her mother," Jordin Walston's cousin Naomi Walston, 32, said in an exclusive interview with the Daily News.

"That's all they had, was each other."

Jordin Walston was stabbed in the chest by Samaria Lopez, 22, on W. 40th St. near Eighth Ave. outside the Port Authority Bus Terminal around 10:15 p.m. last Tuesday, cops said.

In surveillance video obtained by The News, Lopez was seen making a beeline for Walston on the sidewalk as the victim stood with several people, and the two grappled with each other before Lopez stabbed Walston twice. The entire encounter lasted 20 seconds.

Walston managed to slip away from Lopez and medics rushed her to Bellevue Hospital, but she could not be saved.

Walston's grandfather started an online fundraiser Sunday to cover the cost of a funeral and benefit Walston's daughter Legacy, whom he wants to bring to North Carolina to live with him.

"She left a baby behind ... who needs to be taken care of. I'm lost for words life will never be the same. I want a decent burial and my granddaughter well taken care of," Larry Walston wrote.

In addition to the financial stress, the grandfather is struggling emotionally, along with Walston's grandmother.

"I can't deal with knowing my granddaughter won't be here and how she died," said Larry Walston, 64.

"My ex is in the hospital," said the grandfather. "My ex is Jordin's grandmother, she had a nervous breakdown behind this."

Walston's cousin remembered the victim, who spent much of her childhood with her, as physically small but with a big personality.

"She was tiny," said Naomi Walston. "She was a firecracker, she was intelligent."

Naomi Walston recalled "her favorite little cousin" teaching her classmates Spanish when she was 6.

"She had a lot of life snuffed out of her," said the relative.

Naomi Walston said her cousin and her cousin's mother were just getting back on good terms with each other after the victim spent a portion of her childhood in foster care.

"They were finally starting to bond and get back to that space," said the cousin. "She shouldn't have been murdered on the street like an animal, and she shouldn't be buried like that. Jordin doesn't deserve to be thrown away like nothing."

After the stabbing, Lopez simply walked off, but she was arrested on Friday for the killing, said cops. According to the Manhattan district attorney's office, Lopez was arraigned Saturday on murder charges and held without bail.

Lopez gave no reason for the deadly attack, a police source said, and told reporters nothing as she was taken out of the Midtown

South Precinct stationhouse on W. 35th St. on Friday

"It's a weird one, she hasn't said anything," the source said. "All we know is it stems from a previous dispute."

At the start of the surveillance video, seven adults, one of them carrying a baby and another with a toddler in a stroller, look warily down the block to the east, the direction they have just come from.

They pause about a minute outside a convenience store, where they have a discussion, and suddenly the suspect rushes them.

"She knows what she did, and she looked really evil," Naomi Walston said of Lopez. "She deserves to be sentenced and get a sentence of a murderer."

"She took away a young lady's life, somebody's mother," said the cousin. "Jordin didn't deserve that."

The Middletown Road subway station in the Bronx, where Gerard Ashitey, 13 (below), fell to his death from a northbound No. 6 train.

MY SON'S FATAL MISTAKE

Mom says peer pressure led teen to subway surfing & death

BY RONI JACOBSON
AND LEONARD GREENE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A 13-year-old boy who died last week after subway surfing on a Bronx train was a victim of peer pressure, his grieving mother said.

Gerard Ashitey was killed Friday morning after falling from a northbound No. 6 train at the Middletown Road station in Pelham Bay, according to police.

His mom, who didn't want her name published, thinks his friends put him up to it.

"Absolutely," she said Monday. "He never would have done it otherwise."

She described her son as a regular teenager who would have "never" done anything like subway surfing on his own.

"He was an adventurous kid. He liked to try different things," she said. "He is adventurous in that he wants to try new things, new games. He is not adventurous like that."

Gerard's idea of adventure was "taking this apart and fixing it," the grieving parent said, pointing to a box fan. "Not stuff like that."

Her son was a good kid with good grades, she said, so she and her husband didn't worry about him.

The Bronx boy got in trouble once last year during his first year in middle school after he and several classmates cut class and sneaked off to Times Square, she said.

"We talked to him," she said. "The principal talked to him about the consequences of his actions. He doesn't have to follow his friends. He has to be in school. That's why we are here. He has to be careful. I always talk to him. I say you have to choose the right path, that there are consequences to everything you do."

With Gerard's good grades, she could get past him skipping school for a day, she said.

But not this.

"When they called me on Friday I wasn't expecting it," she said. "I was so devastated."

Another teen was seriously injured hours earlier in a separate Bronx subway surfing incident.

At 1:40 a.m. on Friday, a 15-year-old was badly hurt while surfing on another northbound 6 train at the Morris Ave.-Soundview station, police said. Medics rushed the teen to Jacobi Medical Center in critical condition.

Through last Friday, there have been 104 subway surfing incidents this year, with two people killed, five others hurt and 99 arrested, police said.

The MTA last September enlisted students in a public safety awareness campaign to discourage kids and teens from riding atop subway cars or on their sides.

Two months later, the NYPD started using drones to spot surfers and call ahead to train operators so they could stop the train.

Gerard's parents, who immigrated from Ghana before Gerard and his two younger siblings were born, launched a GoFundMe campaign to help pay for his funeral expenses. His mother said she hopes other teens learn from this tragedy.

"They have to be very careful," she said. "Peer pressure is a very bad thing. Everything has consequences. Gerard made a mistake, and now he is gone. Life is worth it."

Masks can enable protesters (below at pro-Palestinian rally) to evade consequences, leading Mayor Adams (bottom) to support Gov. Hochul's call for a ban.

Need to show face: Eric

Wants mask ban, but hasn't worked out medical exception

BY MICHAEL GARTLAND
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mayor Adams on Monday reiterated his support for a ban on face masks proposed last week by Gov. Hochul, but he did not say how such a ban should account for people wearing masks out of medical necessity.

Hochul floated the idea of a ban last Thursday after masked pro-Palestinian protesters menacingly demanded that Zionists raise their hands on a packed subway car because “this is your chance to get out.”

Adams has come out for such a move as well, saying at a City Hall press conference Monday that he's had “several conversations with the governor” about it and that he strongly supports a ban on subways and at protests.

“Covering your face while you do terrible things is not new. There were these guys that used to ride around with hoods in the Deep South,” he said, referring to the Ku Klux Klan. “Cowards cover their faces. If you believe in something, then stand up and show your face.”

Masks have become common at recent protests against Israel's military response to the Oct. 7 terrorist attacks by Hamas. New York State put a ban against masks into effect in 1845, but that was lifted amid the COVID pandemic when they became a necessity to prevent spread of the disease.

While COVID cases have dropped sharply since the height of the pandemic, many who are immunocompromised continue to wear them in public.

Asked how that should be accounted for in a new ban, Adams acknowledged that such a measure is “all about the proper implementation,” but he did not go into any detail about what that might look like.

His press team did not immediately respond to questions about how such a ban would take health factors into account.

Upstate midwife pleads guilty to vax card scam

BY JOHN ANNESE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A midwife who helped an upstate clinic hand out thousands of COVID vaccine cards to people who never got the vaccine pleaded guilty to a federal fraud charge in Brooklyn on Monday.

Kathleen Breault, 66, admitted to her role in the vaccine scheme, which the feds say was run out of Sage-Femme Midwifery in Albany in 2021 and 2022, at a time when mandates required government and many private-sector employees to get the shot.

Breault and the clinic's owner, Kelly McDermott, both certified nurse midwives, conspired to give out more than 2,600 vaccine cards to the unvaccinated, and destroyed vials of the vaccine as part of the scheme, the feds alleged in a 2023 indictment. McDermott's case is still pending.

“My plea is guilty,” Breault told Brooklyn Federal Judge Rachel Kovner. “I gave vaccine cards to people who did not get medical vaccines.”

Based on federal guidelines, she could face 10 to 16 months behind bars when she's sentenced Sept. 18. She must also pay more than $37,500 in restitution. The charge she pleaded to, conspiracy to defraud the United States, carries a maximum five-year prison term.

Breault and McDermott conspired to enroll Sage-Femme as an authorized COVID-19 vaccine administration site, which meant they could get genuine vaccine cards from the state Health Department, according to the feds.

They then solicited people who were looking to skip the vaccine but get their cards, and even held vaccination clinic days at Sage-Femme, the feds said. But instead of administering the vaccines, they destroyed the doses and logged their patients into the state's immunization database anyway, according to the feds.

Prosecutors referred to Sage-Femme as a small midwife practice, with locations in Albany, Sharon Springs and Saratoga, but said the fraud scheme turned it into one of the busiest Johnson & Johnson vaccination sites in the state.

The indictment identifies two patients who got cards without vaccines, and states that Breault herself did not take the vaccine but still got a card from a licensed practical nurse working at Sage-Femme.

In an October affidavit, Breault described herself as a “scapegoat for deep and abiding public rejection of the vaccine mandates” and said she “acted out of her conscience.”

Annual disclosure reveals comped trips, tennis tickets and honorary post at city-funded group

BY CHRIS SOMMERFELDT
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mayor Adams got official trips to international hotspots as well as U.S. Open tickets comped by outside groups last year, and was engaged in “agency interactions” with his own administration concerning a nonprofit group he’s involved with that receives city funding, his latest financial disclosure reveals.

The mandatory disclosure, released Monday by the city Conflicts of Interest Board, says Urban Glass, a nonprofit arts organization in Brooklyn for which Adams serves as an “honorary board member,” received municipal funding in 2023 for “programming and operations.”

Because the group gets taxpayer dollars, Adams’ disclosure says he as an honorary board member technically participated in “interactions” last year with his own Cultural Affairs Department, which Urban Glass receives most of its city funding from.

Procurement records show Urban Glass has received more than $408,000 so far this fiscal year, which started July 1 and runs through the end of this month. Procurement records show the group, which offers glassblowing classes at a downtown Brooklyn workshop, has received city funding for years, including some $399,000 last fiscal year and about $467,000 in the fiscal year before that.

Adams has served in the unpaid, nonvoting Urban Glass board role since before becoming mayor, but his previous two mayoral financial disclosures did not mention that the group relies on municipal funding or say he engaged with agencies on its behalf.

John Kaehny, executive director of the Reinvent Albany government watchdog group, said it wasn’t clear from what’s publicly available why Adams’ previous forms didn’t disclose details about Urban Glass’ city funding and interactions.

Adams spokeswoman Amaris Cockfield said the mayor is an “ex officio” board member and his involvement in the group does not affect its city funding levels, but wouldn’t say why Adams’ previous financial disclosures do not track with the 2023 form.

The new disclosure, which spells out ranges instead of exact dollar amounts, also reveals Adams got free tickets to the first match of last August’s U.S. Open in Queens worth between $50 and $999. The tickets were paid by the host, the U.S. Tennis Association, per the disclosure, and Adams delivered remarks at the stadium before the match got underway.

“The heart and hustle of this epic competition reflects our city and we’re proud to welcome it back,” Adams’ X account posted from the Aug. 28 match, which he attended with his partner, Education Department official Tracey Collins.

Adams attended the first U.S. Open game in 2022 with Collins, too, but his financial disclosure from that year did not report free tickets. Adams spokesman Fabien Levy said he didn’t immediately have details on how the mayor’s 2022 tickets were paid for, but that the Conflicts of Interest Board cleared his 2023 comped match appearance.

In a briefing at City Hall earlier Monday, Adams said he could not recall attending the 2023 match before Levy chimed in to remind him he “went for a minute” to deliver remarks.

“I’m all over the place, Man, all this stuff mush together,” Adams said. “I don’t keep up with all this stuff.”

It’s against the law for city officials to receive gifts worth more than $50 from entities that do business with the city, and the Conflicts of Interest Board specifically ruled in 2012 that free U.S. Open tickets fall into that prohibited category. There’s an exemption to the ban, however, if there’s an official function, like a speech, that’s connected with the gift.

Adams also went on several overseas trips in 2023 that his disclosure shows were paid for by private and foreign entities.

The disclosure says Colombia’s government spent between $1,000 and $4,999 on “security, ground and air transportation” for Adams when he traveled to the country in October to tour the Darien Gap, a treacherous jungle pass many migrants go through before crossing into the U.S. Adams went there as New York experienced an influx of migrants from the southern border. On the same trip, Adams also visited Mexico for the North Capital Forum conference, where he delivered a speech urging migrants to consider not going to New York, which has since 2022 struggled to accommodate the influx.

I don't recall meeting Harlem woman indicted in straw donor scheme: mayor

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Mayor Adams said he does not remember everyone he meets when asked why his City Hall team previously said he didn't know an indicted Harlem woman he met face-to-face for an hour in May 2021 to discuss ongoing problems at her Harlem housing complex.

Two years before six people were indicted as part of a conspiracy to funnel illegal donations to his 2021 City Hall run, Adams met with one of the defendants, Millicent Redick, in her apartment at Esplanade Gardens, a sprawling six-building Mitchell-Lama co-op in Harlem. Six of her fellow residents also attended.

In July, after she and the other defendants in the straw donor case were charged, Adams' press team said the mayor knew only one person indicted as part of the scheme, Dwayne Montgomery, a former cop who ultimately pleaded guilty and was hit with a $500 fine and 200 hours of community service.

While it "may be challenging really for people to understand," Adams said he meets with hundreds of people daily and doesn't remember them all.

"I don't remember everyone who's in the room," he said at a City Hall news conference. "Let's be very clear what the district attorney made clear: We had no involvement in what was wrongdoing. I meet hundreds of people every single day."

Redick was surprised at Adams' comment Monday. "Amazing," she said. "The meeting at my apartment was quite intimate with myself and six of my friends. It was not your typical generic or unremarkable campaign event."

The Manhattan district attorney's charges against the people involved in the illegal donations center on Montgomery, a former NYPD inspector, and Shamsuddin Riza, a contractor, accused of gathering illegal straw donations in an effort to cash in on contracts once Adams was elected. Adams has not been accused of any wrongdoing.

In addition to Montgomery's plea, Riza pleaded guilty and received three years probation. Two officials with EcoSafety Consultants also pleaded guilty. Redick has not pleaded guilty.

Prosecutors on the case offered her a misdemeanor plea with no fine or jail time in May as well as a plea to a noncriminal violation, but she has so far declined the deal and insists she did nothing wrong.

The meeting with Adams came about after years of frustration Redick, a retired accountant, and many other residents in Esplanade Gardens have harbored over poor conditions stemming from a troubled renovation at the complex. Redick has lived there since 1968.

To arrange the sitdown, she turned to Riza, a friend of her late husband for whom she provided accounting services. Riza told the Daily News that he in turn reached out to Montgomery.

"I said she's a very good person and what's happened to the seniors there is a shame," Riza said. "He said, 'No problem.'"

That led, in May 2021, to Adams, who was then Brooklyn borough president and a candidate for mayor, and David Johnson, then a campaign aide and currently a special assistant to Adams, arriving at her front door. The meeting lasted about an hour, according to Redick and a friend who attended.

Redick said Adams made "general promises" there, and afterward she and her friends agreed to raise money for him.

Redick donated $500 to Adams that August. She says she also collected contributions from residents and turned them into money orders.

Redick says she sent copies of the money orders to Riza but held on to the originals. Once she learned that the campaign was no longer accepting donations, she refunded the money orders to the people who donated.

The indictment alleges Riza sent her two checks totaling $3,100 to buy money orders to further the straw donor scheme. But Redick says the checks from Riza were payment for unrelated bookkeeping work she did for him. Riza backed up Redick's account to The News.

After Adams' election, Redick and other tenants complained his administration has done little to address the problems in the complex.

The North Capital Forum paid $1,000 to $4,999 for Adams' "airline, accommodations and ground transportation" in Mexico, his disclosure says.

At the time of the Latin America sojourn, Adams said he was "paying my own way" for that trip. "You know my rule: My dime, my time, don't whine," he said in October.

The United Jewish Appeal-Federation of New York spent another $1,000 to $4,999 on Adams' "flights, accommodations, meals and ground transportation" in Israel during his August trip there, the financial forms say. As first reported by the Daily News last year, the precise price tag for Adams' Israel trip was $4,857, and his decision to let the UJA-Federation pay that tab raised concern from government watchdogs because two of the group's executives have city government business interests.

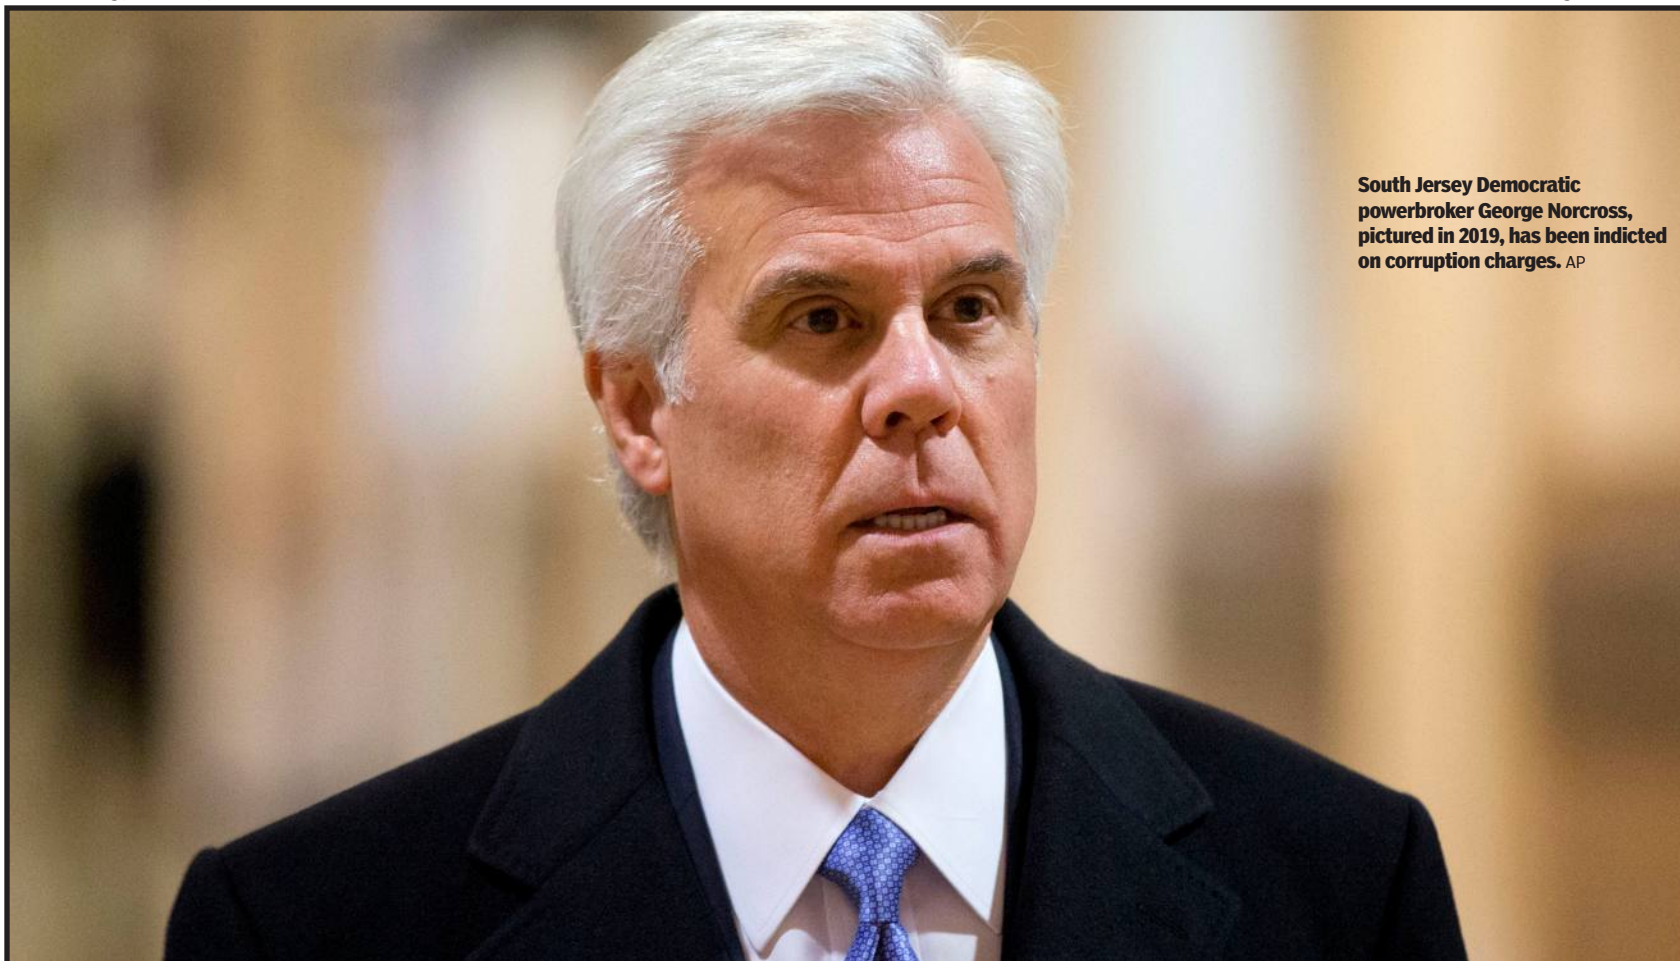

Asked about subsidized tennis tickets and trips, Kaehny of Reinvent Albany said he believes there should be a law against elected officials receiving any gifts exceeding $15, including ones related to official duties.

Kaehny argued that if there truly is a city government purpose for an activity, taxpayer dollars should be used on expenses connected to it. Letting private entities pick up the tab for politicians could "affect the choices" they make in an official capacity, he continued, pointing to a 2023 study from his group that cited "studies by economists and behavioral scientists."

Adams' latest disclosure shows his income remained largely the same in 2023, most of it coming from his more than $250,000 mayoral salary. He also continues to collect between $5,000 and $54,999 in royalties from "Healthy at Last," a cookbook he co-authored, it shows.

The disclosure also says Adams continues to hold at least $5,000 in Bitcoin and still owns a one-bedroom apartment in Prospect Heights, Brooklyn, with Sylvia Cowan, an ex-girlfriend.

Adams claimed during the 2021 campaign he had transferred his share in the unit to Cowan, but revealed last year he never did so because he changed his mind about giving up the apartment now that Prospect Heights is "a hot place to own property."

South Jersey Democratic powerbroker George Norcross, pictured in 2019, has been indicted on corruption charges. AP

South Jersey Dem powerbroker is indicted

BY DAVE GOLDINER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

South Jersey Democratic powerbroker George Norcross was indicted Monday on state racketeering and corruption charges in a new blow to the Garden State's once potent political machine.

The powerful kingmaker and brother of sitting Democratic Rep. Donald Norcross was hit with 13 criminal counts tied to a sweeping scheme to take financial and political advantage of the lucrative redevelopment of the Camden waterfront.

"The Norcross enterprise manipulated government programs and processes designed to attract development and investment to instead suit their own financial desires," New Jersey Attorney General Matt Platkin said. "Instead of contributing to the successes of the city ... the Norcross enterprise took the Camden waterfront all for themselves."

Norcross, who has controlled the vote-spinning South Jersey Democratic machine for three decades, was charged along with his lobbyist brother Phillip and several other cronies.

They're charged with bullying a developer into relinquishing a prime waterfront site with threats of political retaliation and engineering a lucrative tax-credit scheme to benefit his associates.

"[Norcross] threatened the developer that he would ... 'f--- you up like you've never been f---ed up before,' the indictment says. "[He] told the developer he would make sure the developer never did business in Camden again."

The developer wound up selling the site for $18 million to a Norcross pal who wound up pocketing $240 million in tax credits, the indictment says.

George Norcross sat in the front row of Platkin's press conference announcing the indictment. His lawyer tried to ask the state's top lawman a question but Platkin left without answering.

Norcross, a former Democratic National Committee member and onetime head of the Camden County Democratic Party, has faced legal scrutiny for years but has never been charged by state or federal prosecutors.

The South Jersey machine headed by Norcross was once one of the most powerful political operations in the nation.

Its power has waned in recent years as New Jersey has become more of a solidly blue state, meaning its power to deliver votes has become less important to swinging statewide elections.

Onetime Democratic Rep. Jeff Van Drew also dealt a blow to the organization by crossing the aisle to become a Republican in 2020.

The indictment makes Norcross the latest Garden State Democrat to face criminal charges.

Sen. Robert Menendez is currently on trial for his role in a federal bribery and influence-peddling scheme.

Surgeon general calls for social media warning labels

BY BRIAN NIEMIETZ
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The U.S. surgeon general is demanding warning labels for social media platforms similar to those on cigarette packaging meant to discourage young people from smoking.

"In May 2023, I outlined recommendations to make social media safer for kids," Surgeon General Vivek Murthy posted on social media Monday. "Yet parents and children are still waiting for change."

In an opinion piece in The New York Times, Murthy renewed his call for lawmakers to urgently address the "youth mental health crisis" that he believes platforms like X and TikTok are contributing to.

"It is time to require a surgeon general's warning label on social media platforms, stating that social media is associated with significant mental health harms for adolescents," he wrote. "A surgeon general's warning label, which requires congressional action, would regularly remind parents and adolescents that social media has not been proved safe."

The nation's top doctor argued that young people who spend at least three hours daily on social media are twice as likely to experience anxiety and depression. The average adolescent reportedly averaged 4.8 hours of daily social media use in 2023. Roughly half of social media users in that demographic said what they saw online contributed to negative feelings about their bodies.

Murthy said the success of similar labels first recommended for tobacco products in 1964 demonstrates public awareness campaigns can be effective in curbing toxic consumption. He cited a recent Brookings Institution study that found more than 75% of Latino parents surveyed would limit their children's time on social media if federal regulators issued such an advisory.

The National Institutes of Health published research a decade ago suggesting online social networking was responsible for "profound changes in the way people communicate and interact," though researchers were unclear on whether it causes "psychiatric disorders" or affects kids in particular.

Murthy wants the labels he called for Monday to clarify that "social media is associated with significant mental health harms for adolescents."

The surgeon general further wants to see federal legislation aimed at protecting young people from online harassment, extreme violence and sexual content manipulated by algorithms.

Despite voluntary safety efforts made by some social media platforms, Murthy wants a mandate forcing such businesses to publicly share data and facilitate independent audits.

"Americans need more than words," Murthy wrote. "We need proof."

CHUCK: BAN BUMP STOCKS

Plans bid to outlaw 'machine gun' gadget after Supremes nixed fed reg

BY DAVE GOLDINER
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Sen. Chuck Schumer plans a push to outlaw rapid-fire gun bump stocks Tuesday following the Supreme Court striking down a government agency's effort to ban the deadly devices favored by mass killers.

The Democratic majority leader will seek to win unanimous consent for a measure to ban the devices, which allow semiautomatic weapons to fire as many bullets as machine guns, which are illegal for personal use.

A law passed by Congress would override the conservative court's decision Friday that the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives overstepped its authority by banning bump stocks after a gunman used them to kill 58 people at a 2017 Las Vegas country music festival.

"Bump stocks are very, very dangerous," Schumer told the Daily News on Monday. "They convert normal guns into the equivalent of machine guns."

"This latest decision to undo the ban on deadly gun bump stocks, like the one that took the lives of so many people in Las Vegas, risks public safety, public tragedies and could cost human lives," Schumer added.

Former President Donald Trump approved the original ban and harshly denounced bump stocks after the Vegas carnage.

The vast majority of Republicans joined Democrats in supporting the move at the time, a fact that Schumer is highlighting.

"We hope our Republican colleagues will do so again," Schumer said.

"We have to work to change this script, especially on gun violence," Schumer (D-N.Y.) said.

"Americans, they believe in commonsense gun safety. One of the most commonsense things is making sure an evil person can't gain access to a simple gun feature that makes a gun an outright weapon of war in seconds."

Senate Majority Leader Chuck Schumer holds photo of bump stock device — used in 2017 Las Vegas massacre — which he wants banned after Supreme Court ruled feds overreached in outlawing gadget. GETTY

But it's far from clear whether the GOP will go along with Schumer's proposal this time around.

It would only take one senator to block enactment of the law from passing with unanimous consent. If Schumer tries to bring the law up later, it would need 60 votes in the nearly evenly divided body.

Even then, it would need to be approved by the Republican-controlled House of Representatives, a tall order when the GOP is loath to give any political victory to Democrats.

The Supreme Court voted, 6 to 3, along ideological lines to undo the ATF ban on bump stocks, which the Biden administration strongly supported.

In a concurring decision, right-wing Justice Samuel Alito noted that Congress would have the power to enact a ban if it chooses to act to expand the landmark 1934 National Firearms Act that was passed to regulate machine guns in response to widespread gang violence.

Bump stocks enable a gunman to fire up to hundreds of rounds with a single pull of the trigger. But the court ruled that the process is effectively no different from a gunman with an unusually quick trigger finger.

Rents up for 3rd yr. in row

Guidelines Board approves increases of 2.75% to 5.25%

Protesters rally outside Hunter College on the Upper East Side Monday evening, when the Rent Guidelines Board (below) passed hikes of 2.75% for one-year leases and 5.25% for two-year leases.

BY TÉA KVETENADZE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The 2-million-plus New Yorkers living in rent-stabilized apartments will see their rents climb for the third year in a row after the board in charge of setting rates approved the increases at its chaotic final vote on Monday.

The Rent Guidelines Board (RGB) passed hikes of 2.75% for one-year leases and 5.25% for two-year leases as hundreds of people protested outside Hunter College on the Upper East Side.

The nine-person panel of mayoral appointees voted 5 to 4 in favor of the increases, which were narrowed down from preliminary ranges of 2% to 4% for one-year leases and 4% to 6.5% for two-year leases approved at a similarly raucous vote in April.

The changes impact about 1 million households across the city and will take effect Oct. 1.

Dozens of police stood by on the street ahead of the vote before flooding the sidewalk and detaining several protesters blocking the building's main entrance, including Assemblywoman Marcela Mitaynes (D-Brooklyn) and two others. The lawmaker was escorted into the back of a police van with her hands zip-tied behind her back.

Tenants marched, chanted and cheered outside, but, in a departure from years past, mostly refused to enter the voting venue. The handful who did sit in the audience drowned out the landlord representatives and Chairman Nestor Davidson with shouts of "Shame!" "Thief!" and "F--k you!"

Residents and elected officials called out the board and Mayor Adams, who appointed six of the current board members and has closely aligned himself with the real estate industry.

"The RGB is always concerning," Adams said at a press conference on Monday ahead of the vote. "People are hurting. ... I know what it is to worry about your food and your rent, all of those things. So we're going to continue to advocate based on the concerns of New Yorkers."

Retiree Lisa Schwartz, 63, said a rent hike would make her life difficult.

"It's tough living in New York," said the Rego Park, Queens, resident. "Give us a break for the next few years until we all get on our feet again. Since the pandemic, it's been hard for everyone to get on their feet."

She was one of the many tenants who wanted a rent rollback or freeze, as happened under the de Blasio administration during the pandemic years.

Monday's increases were widely expected and have long been characterized by activists as a foregone conclusion in favor of real estate interests. But public frustration at the board has reached a fever pitch this year amid the larger housing and affordability crises in tandem with staggering homelessness and eviction rates, as half of New Yorkers struggle to afford the basics and the majority are rent-burdened.

At the same time, landlord groups and the real estate lobby had been pushing for even higher rent increases to offset operating costs, particularly for older buildings in the outer boroughs.

"This year's RGB vote pushes the city's largest segment of affordable housing, already in financial distress, closer to the edge of insolvency — a disaster for owners and the millions of New Yorkers they house," said Joseph Strasburg, president of the Rent Stabilization Association.

Monday capped the monthslong RGB season in which the board weighs its data alongside public input to decide whether or not to raise rents and, if so, by how much. The buildup to the final vote is customarily marked by raucous public meetings across the boroughs.

Market-rate apartments are not affected by the RGB process.

Last year's final vote brought a 3% hike for one-year leases, a 2.75% increase in the first year of a two-year lease and 3.2% in the second.

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Two men were fatally shot — and a survivor was wounded by a stray bullet — by a gunman in a black ski mask who opened fire on a Manhattan street, police said Monday.

Startling surveillance video obtained by the Daily News shows two men chatting outside Blue Sky Smoke Shop at W. 207th St. and 10th Ave. in Inwood when the shooter opens fire at them from across the street about 11:40 p.m. on Sunday.

One of the men drops to the sidewalk but then lifts his head to shout twice, “Call an ambulance.”

A 44-year-old man shot in the face was rushed by medics to Harlem Hospital, where he died at 12:12 a.m. The shooter's other target, a 45-year-old man, died at New York-Presbyterian Allen Hospital minutes later, cops said.

An uninvolved man was celebrating Father's Day with friends when he stepped out onto the street to take a call.

“Somebody called me and I got out because the music's too loud at the place,” said the 36-year-old bystander, who asked to remain anonymous. “[The shots sounded] like fireworks.”

He looked down and saw that the bullet grazed his knee.

“I feel hot and that's it,” the man said. “I don't know what happened.”

Medics rushed him to Harlem Hospital, where he was treated and released. The restaurant worker feels lucky to be alive.

“I feel I'm scared,” he said. “This is the first time [this] happened.”

The gunman ran off and has not been caught. Police recovered four shell casings at the scene.

Blood still stained the sidewalk Monday afternoon.

The 44-year-old victim, identified by a friend as James Michael, lives in Mount Eden, the Bronx, with his wife.

“He was a standup man and he was all about family and he was one of a kind,” the woman told Gothamist. “I'm just, you know, trying to calm down.”

A neighbor and longtime friend was left reeling in the wake of Michael's death.

“He was a great guy,” said Luis Ramos. “Always happy, always helping people.”

“He knows everybody,” added Ramos, 59. “Everybody knows him.”

Nearby residents reported hearing up to four gunshots, but said the violence now is nothing like it used to be.

“A lot of people get hit by cars — you see that more often than people getting hit by gunshots,” said one man, who is 45 and asked that his name not be used. “This is a pretty good neighborhood. It's not too bad.”

Earlier Sunday, at 9:47 p.m., a 17-year-old boy was shot in the chest and buttocks during a confrontation with two teens at W. 186th St. and Wadsworth Ave. in Washington Heights, a mile away from the murder scene.

The teen is in stable condition at a local hospital. The shooters got away.

Police said the two shootings are not connected.

Congestion cams working

Despite pricing pause & no tolls, system recording traffic data

BY EVAN SIMKO-BEDNARSKI
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Gov. Hochul may have pressed “pause” on congestion pricing — but the system’s cameras are still recording.

The half-billion-dollar network of EZ-Pass and license plate readers (photo) is up and running, despite there being no tolls to assess.

“The cameras are on — we’re taking information about traffic,” MTA Chairman Janno Lieber said last week.

“They’re on,” NYC Transit’s senior vice president of buses, Frank Annicaro, said of the cameras Monday. “But, again, the program is paused right now.”

Asked if the city’s Transportation Department is receiving any traffic data from the half-a-billion dollar system, Commissioner Ydanis Rodriguez’s answer was similarly opaque.

“We are in a pause,” he said.

Transcore, the Nashville-based firm that powers toll collection on MTA bridges and tunnels as well as the New Jersey Turnpike, was promised $555.8 million to build and operate the camera system through 2030.

When Hochul announced an indefinite pause on congestion pricing earlier this month in a surprise about-face, the fate of the camera network — and the MTA’s contract with Transcore — seemed uncertain.

Under the congestion pricing plan, traffic data from the camera network was required by federal regulators, and the MTA had committed to making that data public.

But in the absence of a congestion pricing plan, the agency is using the data for testing, an MTA spokesman said.

“Given the pause, we continue to test the system and are collecting and assessing the data within that context,” Aaron Donovan said in a statement.

A spokesman for Transcore did not immediately respond Monday when asked to whom they were sending traffic data.

The sweeping network of cameras and readers stretches across 60th St. in Manhattan — the northern edge of the planned congestion zone — and clusters around bridge and tunnel landings south of 60th.

Utilizing much of the same technology as the average highway toll plaza, the network was scheduled to begin assessing tolls to motorists who entered Midtown or lower Manhattan on June 30.

Cameras were also placed along the FDR Drive and the West Side Highway, both of which were to be exempted from the congestion pricing plan, in order to track vehicular traffic inside the zone in accordance with federal requirements.

The system has been designed to discriminate between multiple sizes of trucks, as well as cars and buses — which would have been a necessity in order to assess the planned sliding-scale toll.

The system can also reportedly track individual vehicles in order to accurately assess tolls, a capability that has raised concerns among some privacy advocates.

But even in the absence of a congestion toll to assess, the camera network could be very useful for tracking traffic trends, former traffic commissioner and Daily News columnist Sam Schwartz said.

“It’s really the first time we’re going to have city street [level] data that’s reliable,” Schwartz told The News.

The congestion pricing kibosh comes as Manhattan traffic is reaching historic levels, Schwartz said.

“The past 12 months are the slowest 12 months in history.”

The average speed of a taxi cab in the congestion zone was 6.6 mph, according to GPS data collected by Schwartz.

The traffic guru said Monday that he hoped traffic data garnered from the camera network would eventually be made public.

“This [network] can give you data, potentially the next day,” he said. “Hopefully, it’ll be open source.”

COPS ON PUPPY PATROL

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Cops were in the right place at the right time when they saved a batch of pit bull puppies from suffocating in a bag after spotting a woman trying to sell them in Queens, NYPD body cam video shows.

The puppies were crying and in various stages of distress as officers gave them water, with one cop cupping his hand to form a makeshift bowl, the video shows.

Officers on foot patrol spotted the woman pulling a pink plastic bag on a rolling cart on Beach Channel Drive near Hassock St. in Far Rockaway about 6:55 p.m. on Saturday, officials said. She was trying to sell the puppies to a passerby.

"I am selling them," Shirley Medina, 44, said, according to court papers. "There are six. The rest are in the bag. There are small holes for them to breathe through."

But that wasn't the case, police said.

The puppy she was holding was fine, but the bag had no holes in it, and when one cop used a knife to cut it open, the other puppies were discovered.

"So hot, oh my God," one officer can be heard saying in the video the NYPD posted Monday on X. "They're so hot. She was trying to sell the puppies. They were all tied up in the bag. They're dripping in sweat."

One of the puppies, according to court papers, had a cut over its eye.

"You're grabbing me like I'm going to run," Medina could be heard saying as she was being arrested. "I'm not going to run."

The dogs were taken to the ASPCA for treatment and evaluation.

Medina was charged with five counts each of torturing an animal and neglecting an animal. A sixth puppy, the one she was holding in her arms, was not in any apparent danger.

She was also charged with criminal possession of a weapon for brass knuckles found in the pocket of the pink plastic bag in which the puppies nearly died, police said.

Medina, who lives near where she was arrested, was released without bail after being arraigned in Queens Criminal Court.

She has two prior arrests, police said, one for robbery and one for petty larceny.

Bullets hit 3 at Bx. cookout – 2nd triple shoot in city in less than 24 hours

BY KERRY BURKE
AND ELIZABETH KEOGH
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A gunman shot and wounded three people at a Bronx cookout Monday, less than 24 hours after a similar incident in which two men were killed and another was wounded in upper Manhattan.

As a group of people enjoyed the party on E. 221st St. near Bronxwood Ave. in Williamsbridge around 6 p.m., a gunman stepped up and sprayed the crowd with at least 10 bullets, police sources said.

When cops arrived, they discovered a 27-year-old man with a gunshot wound to the right hand and a 21-year-old man suffering from a shot to the back and left armpit, cops said.

Medics took the victims to Jacobi Medical Center, where they were expected to survive.

A short time later, a 33-year-old man walked into the same hospital after being shot twice in the right leg in the same incident, police said.

The older victim was also expected to recover.

A superintendent in the neighborhood watched as the younger victims were loaded into an ambulance.

"There's always drama in that building," Noel Martinez told the Daily News. "There's always stab-bings and shootouts, especially in the summer."

It was the second day in a row of tragedy for the city.

Around 11:40 p.m. Sunday, men ages 44 and 45 were killed when a gunman in a black ski mask opened fire from across the street at W. 207th St. and 10th Ave. in Inwood, hitting the victims outside Blue Sky Smoke Shop.

The younger man, identified by a friend as James Michael, was shot in the face and rushed by medics to Harlem Hospital, but he could not be saved. The shooter's other target died at New York-Presbyterian Allen Hospital minutes later, cops said.

An uninvolved 36-year-old man chatting on the phone nearby was also hit when the stray bullet grazed his knee.

Police have made no arrests.

COVID report card

At long last, New Yorkers have some more concrete insight into how the state conducted its COVID-19 emergency response in the crucial first two pandemic years in the form of a 262-page report from the firm Olson Group Ltd., commissioned in late 2022 by Gov. Hochul.

The study acknowledges much of what we already knew: preparations could be laid for a situation a bit like COVID, but no one could have predicted the scale and horrific contours of the emergency it created. Playbooks existed for the ramp-up of the disease up to a point, but beyond that it was uncharted territory.

Olson says that those best positioned to navigate these treacherous waters would have been a variety of bureaucrats and subject matter experts who had spent careers developing just such plans and emergency responses. Per the report, this is where things started really going off the rails, as former Gov. Andrew Cuomo decided to centralize decision-making, relying on executive orders to run the pandemic response out of his office.

Cuomo's spokesman issued a statement on Twitter calling it ironic that the review found that "in a time of unprecedented crisis, state government should vacate responsibility and delegate leadership." But the alternative wasn't to hand off COVID to some unknown; it was still part of Cuomo's administration, so why not let it administer?

While Cuomo's clear voice was welcome in a time of chaos, lower levels of his government still had a role. How is delegating tasks to his own agencies some kind of weak-willed abdication?

No shortcuts allowed

An op-ed in these pages today makes an argument against voters this November approving an amendment to the New York State Constitution called the Equal Rights Amendment. The Daily News has also published the view advocating for ratification of the amendment, which we tend to support. However, the question should not even appear on the ballot this fall because the Legislature failed to follow the Constitution's own rules on how to proceed on an amendment.

It is very clear that the first step is for the Legislature to introduce an amendment. Step 2 is to send it to the state attorney general for a non-binding legal opinion. If the AG stalls more than 20 days or refuses to give an opinion, lawmakers are free to vote.

Two years ago, after the U.S. Supreme Court

These lessons and others — including the directive to improve access to health for marginalized populations overall, which were often left behind during the early pandemic in particular — should be absorbed by decision-makers ahead of the unfortunately likely scenario of more highly infectious and novel diseases.

And the report also hardly reckons with the thinking behind the biggest Cuomo-era COVID-related controversy — the decision to make nursing homes accept COVID-19 patients discharged from hospitals in the early days of the pandemic. Yes, those were the people's homes, but as we would learn, the nursing homes weren't equipped to handle the infection. And then there's the matter of how to properly account for the deaths and where the deceased caught COVID. That also tripped up Cuomo and his aides.

Olson does delve into the nursing home matter, but does not answer crucial questions about who made that call or what went into it. Those are queries that still require more concrete answers.

Those answers about nursing homes and an understanding of why did the public health departments on the city and state level have their syndromic surveillance fail to flag COVID earlier, should come from a government review of the government response, by passing a state law to set up a formal commission, with subpoena power, a legal authority that Olson lacked.

The Olson report cost New York $4.3 million, or $16,500 in taxpayer money per page, including title and table of contents. It's real money, but COVID has killed more than 83,000 New Yorkers. Getting all the answers from a commission will be well worth whatever the price tag comes to be.

terribly knocked down Roe v. Wade, Gov. Hochul called a special session. On a single day, July 1, 2022, the Legislature introduced the ERA, referred it to AG Tish James and then voted its approval. James issued her view on July 6. Lawmakers had failed to wait and their vote is invalid.

Republican Assemblywoman Marjorie Byrnes sued and won. Yesterday, an appellate panel heard the case. The facts are undisputed. What the Legislature claims, wrongly, is that such a lawsuit, called an Article 78, should have been filed earlier. But this wasn't an Article 78 case and it was properly done. The ruling should stand.

Albany must only amend the Constitution correctly. Maybe the ERA can be on the 2025 ballot, but not this year.

Trashing the Trump transcripts

It was a big victory for transparency when the leadership of the New York State court system, headed by state Chief Judge Rowan Wilson, Chief Administrative Judge Joe Zayas and First Deputy Chief Administrative Judge Norman St. George, announced on the first day of Donald Trump's Manhattan criminal trial on April 22 that the daily transcripts would be published on the internet.

Regular readers know that these columns had campaigned for this basic step for months.

So now we can report with great disappointment that the transcripts from the 19 days of trial have vanished from the court's website.

Had Trump been acquitted, and his whole case sealed as a matter of law, that was a possibility. But, as everyone on planet Earth is well aware, he was convicted of 34 felonies on May 30. The public record must be restored to the public.

The court stenographers fought hard against publishing transcripts. They are well-salaried public employees (in the range of $130,000) but still sell the transcripts and keep the money. The 19 days of transcripts and the four days of jury selection total 4,959 pages. The stenographers charged 75 cents a page to 18 news organizations that bought the transcripts. That comes to $66,946.50. The IRS should take notice.

At first, the web transcripts were difficult to use and could not be searched or copied. Eventually, they were changed to a more useful form, but only after the New York Times and the Washington Post published friendly formats. But now it's all gone. Put the transcripts back.

The risks of N.Y.'s ERA ballot question

BE OUR GUEST

BY SARA STOCKTON

As we approach the potential vote on New York State's Equal Rights Amendment (ERA), on Nov. 5, we confront a pressing issue: the potential unintended consequences of prioritizing equality, particularly concerning the well-being of our children.

While the ERA may or may not ultimately end up on the ballot on the general Election Day, because of a recent lower court ruling, and pending appeal, New Yorkers deserve to understand its impacts. One can be sure, that as long as the current governor and attorney general remain in office, the so-called ERA is not going anywhere. Our children need an informed and active electorate.

The proposed amendment expands fundamental rights, including for minors, encompassing categories such as "sexual orientation," "gender identity," and "gender expression." This extension of rights to minors could empower courts to enforce policies allowing minors to undergo transgender medical interventions without parental involvement.

Irrespective of one's stance on transgender health care, there are legitimate concerns regarding the safety and long-term effects of such interventions for children and adolescents grappling with gender dysphoria. The proposed changes in the ERA diverge from guidance provided by both international and domestic health care authorities, endangering both children and the health care professionals responsible for their well-being.

Many European nations, once pioneers in transgender health care, have adopted a more cautious approach, particularly concerning youth, citing insufficient evidence supporting the long-term safety of these interventions. Recent actions, such as the U.K.'s National Health Service banning puberty blockers for treating transgender minors, underscore these concerns.

Similarly, Sweden's National Board of Health and Welfare determined that the risks of such treatments for minors outweigh the potential benefits, emphasizing the need for more research into their impact.

Regardless of political leanings, there is a valid debate on ethically and safely treating youth gender dysphoria. While some advocate for restrictions on transgender participation in sports and reconsidering LGBTQ education in schools, others advocate for unrestricted care for trans youth, sometimes dismissing mental health counseling as transphobic.

Despite claims that the ERA primarily addresses abortion access, it also encroaches upon parental rights and promotes a radical gender ideology.

Many children facing sexual orientation or mental health challenges are being steered towards transitioning, potentially due to societal acceptance or hopes of alleviating their struggles. However, comprehensive mental health treatment can address these issues, with approximately 80% of childhood gender dysphoria cases resolving by puberty.

The ERA disregards the international and domestic calls to reevaluate how we approach dysphoria in youth, leaving many parents and medical professionals apprehensive about exploring alternative options.

Some parents have faced pressure from health care providers to blindly affirm their child's desires, with one parent recounting a therapist's remark: "Do you want a dead son or a live daughter?" Nurse Aaron Kelly, a trans man, experienced similar coercion in a clinic that prioritized immediate hormone treatment over addressing patients' mental health concerns. When he questioned the treatment of the youth, he was forced to leave his position.

This coercive approach can result in irreversible consequences, as seen in the high discontinuation rate of hormonal therapy and its long-term effects, such as infertility.

Around 30% of hormonal therapy patients discontinue treatment within four years and are left with effects that are often irreversible. One professional who was medically injured by this "gender-affirming care" reflected, "You're made to believe these slogans... Evidence-based, lifesaving care, safe and effective, medically necessary, the science is settled — and none of that is evidence-based?" The care that these patients are receiving is experimental and we are still just seeing the lifelong implications.

The ERA grants children the right to undergo life-altering medical interventions lacking robust scientific support, bypassing parental authority. Instead, we can support children without resorting to such measures, respecting parental involvement in their health care decisions.

As we strive for equity and justice, we must scrutinize the motivations and consequences of proposed legislation, particularly when it impacts our state Constitution. Is it truly about expanding human rights or political gain?

We owe our kids an understanding of policies that affect them and to vote against those that undermine their best interests.

BRAMHALL'S WORLD

Investing in 3-K helps New York City's economy

Raising children in New York City can be hard and often requires heavy lifting. Try carrying a child in a stroller down the subway stairs. Add in the scarcity of housing, the inaccessibility of child care, and the rising cost of living, and it is no wonder that young families are leaving the city at increasing rates. New research from the Fiscal Policy Institute shows that parents with children under six are moving away from the city at twice the rate of other residents.

At the same time young families are leaving, there are some bright spots: an analysis of LinkedIn data by venture firm SignalFire found that more tech workers relocated to New York than any other city last year. Many of these workers — who power our fastest-growing industry — will soon start their own families and decide whether New York is a pit stop on their journey or their new lifelong home, and our city's leaders should be doing everything they can to keep them here.

To make a true economic comeback following the COVID-19 pandemic, and for the city to continue to grow, families need to be able to live, work, and thrive here. One key policy choice that can help reverse these troubling population trends is public investment in child care.

BE OUR GUEST

BY GRACE RAUH
AND JULIE SAMUELS

Today, child care is inaccessible and unaffordable for far too many New Yorkers as detailed in the 5BORO Institute's report on child care. Families are spending tremendous portions of their income on child care, keeping them from contributing to the local economy. Child care is not only an issue that impacts parents. In 2022 alone, the city is estimated to have lost $23 billion dollars in economic activity and $2.2 billion in tax revenues as a result of parents leaving the workforce or downshifting careers to meet child care needs.

For many families, the city's 3-K and Pre-K programs have provided a vital lifeline. Access to free preschool can save families upward of $20,000 a year, giving parents the economic breathing room to stay in New York. But the uncertainty about 3-K access has left families in a state of limbo. As families prepared for this year's application cycle, Mayor Adams said that every family would have access to a spot in the city's program. We applaud the city's commitment to this crucial service.

However, when families received their preschool offers last month, not every family was met with good news. About 2,500 families that applied to 3-K received no offer at all and many more received offers to programs that would be impractical for their children to attend given the far away location.

City Hall has pointed to the aggregate figures that suggest there are more than enough 3-K spots for every child. But for a family in Prospect Heights, Brooklyn that did not get an offer — a neighborhood where 3-K demand far outstrips supply — the surplus 3-K capacity on the Lower East Side is meaningless. Parents need access to care that is reliable and accessible; commuting 30 minutes or more to preschool is not viable for most working families.

Parents — and now labor leaders — are calling on city officials to ensure truly universal access to 3-K. We are adding our voices to make clear that this issue impacts more than just families.

Child care access is critical to our business sector and our economy. This is especially important for our tech sector, as New York has become a hub for women's and family tech startups, many of which are founded and run by women.

A 2022 study conducted by Tech:NYC and the Center for an Urban Future found that New York was home to 123 startups working in women-focused products and services, up from 83 in 2017. The growth in this sub-sector represents a competitive advantage for New York over other tech hubs, but more robust childcare infrastructure is needed to ensure even more women can launch companies that fill unmet needs for other women, or continue their jobs in tech once they start a family to help close the industry's persistent gender gap.

The business case for public spending on early childhood education is clear: Studies have shown that in neighborhoods with access to 3-K, maternal employment rates rose and stayed higher, even after children exited the 3-K program.

As our leaders continue to focus on boosting the local economy and supporting businesses in their continued recovery from the pandemic, the imperative should be clear: invest in early childhood education in every neighborhood to make sure that families can stay in New York and raise their children here. Our financial future depends upon it.

Attacks on religious symbols are acts of hate

New City, N.Y.: Sadly, the recent attack on items of veneration at St. Dominic's Roman Catholic Church in Brooklyn, where statues of Mother Teresa and Pope John XXIII were defaced with a hammer, highlights the double standard of outrage by city and state officials when crimes target the Catholic community. It is difficult to comprehend how anyone can not see the targeted smashing of the faces of these two figures as anything other than an expression of hate.

We recall how politicians, particularly Mayor Adams, tripped over themselves to get to microphones to denounce a similar attack on a statue of Gandhi at a Queens Hindu temple. There are numerous examples of local politicians denouncing antisemitic and Islamophobic-inspired vandalism. Speaking out against such attacks is proper and commendable; what is not acceptable is the deafening silence from these same elected officials when acts of hate are directed at the Catholic community.

Some will note that the perpetrator of the attack on St. Dominic's is "unhinged" and suffers from mental illness. But is anyone who engages in hate truly sane? Is not any attack on any faith community unhinged?

It is time to end the double standard in addressing hate attacks. We must send a message that attacks on the Catholic community are not merely criminal mischief but serious offenses that warrant the same level of condemnation and action. Anything less is a second assault on the Catholic community.

Manhattan: A notable but rarely mentioned fact regarding the just-started New York primaries is that once again, the state's unaffiliated voters, such as myself, will be unable to vote in these elections. About 5.1 million of New York state's registered voters, or 24%, are not affiliated with a political party. In other states we are called registered independents. New York dismissively refers to us as "blanks." We are forbidden to vote in the primaries for any office because New York remains among the small handful of states with a fully closed primary system. It shares that dubious distinction with Florida. Closed primaries promote partisan polarization and amplify the influence of ideological extremes, in addition to disenfranchising a large portion of the electorate. It is high time that New York got rid of this obsolete and undemocratic system and allowed all registered voters to vote in the primary election of their choosing.

Brooklyn: To Voicer W.J. Van Sickle: You made the statement

Chasing dollars

Brooklyn: It is disgraceful that President Biden and Donald Trump have to go around and hold fundraisers so they can campaign for president. This is wrong for several reasons. It takes them away from actually meeting voters. The second reason is that it is dangerous. The people who attend these fundraisers are very wealthy, and they are looking for special favors that usually are only good for them, with no regard for the average American. Trump promised his rich friends that he would give them tax breaks and reduce environmental regulations. I am sure Biden also has made promises. It is time that all elections are completely financed by our government. It would be costly but would produce more honest government. Candidates will have to focus on acting in the best interests of everybody, not a special few. It might sound idealistic, but the current system promotes corruption.

Kew Gardens: Ironically, rightist voters in Western industrialized nations are adamantly opposed to immigrants entering their countries from other parts of the world, as though their entry will have a negative influence. Yet, for centuries, these same Western nations tremendously enriched themselves and had no restraints about invading the countries from which the migrants are arriving, subjugating the natives, colonizing the territories, exploiting indigenous labor and resources, installing compliant political leaders, indoctrinating the dominated people to Western religious beliefs and culture, while leaving a slew of mixed-race progeny in their wake. What hypocrites.

The right to kill?

Fort Worth, Texas: How is it possible that the U.S. Supreme Court has gone from pro-life to pro-death in less than two years?

I don't understand how six Christian justices who must have read the Bible verse Exodus 20:13, "Thou shalt not kill," would even consider overturning the ban on rapid-fire bump stocks. It's bad enough that military-style assault rifles that can shoot 45 bullets per minute are legal, but now if a bump stock is added, an AR-15 can shoot 400-800 rounds per minute. If the gunman who killed 19 children and two teachers at Robb Elementary School in Uvalde, Texas, was able to buy bump stocks, he would've been able to murder every single person in that school, including the police who were waiting in the hall, too terrified to enter.

Armed man shot dead in B'klyn did fed time in drug ring case

BY ROCCO PARASCANDOLA
AND JOHN ANNESE
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A 32-year-old man carrying a gun was fatally shot outside a Brooklyn NYCHA complex, police said Monday.

Tyreek Ogarro was blasted multiple times in the torso on Ralph Ave. near Chauncey St. outside the Breevort Houses in Bedford-Stuyvesant about 11:05 p.m. Saturday, cops said.

Medics rushed Ogarro to Kings County Hospital, but he could not be saved. He was about half a mile from home when he was shot, according to cops.

The shooter ran off and has not been caught.

A gun was found on the victim, but it wasn't clear if Ogarro pulled the weapon on his killer, police said.

The victim, who was out on supervised release after serving more than four years in federal prison in a drug distribution case, was working on putting his life in order as he struggled with an ongoing drug addiction, according to court filings.

He was busted in June 2018 as part of a sweeping 15-suspect federal indictment in Manhattan against members of the Brooklyn-based "Boss Crew."

His role in the crew was as a wholesale drug supplier, and he sold or attempted to sell crack, pills, fentanyl and pot, according to court filings. He also had access to a gun and was caught on wiretaps talking about trying to get ammo and attempting to trade his piece for a different gun, the feds said.

In the same conversation about trading a gun, he talked about beating up someone who owed him $31. "It's a principle," he said. "I'm just gonna break this little n----- body up real quick."

Prior to his March 2020 sentencing, Ogarro's lawyer Dawn Cardi described the time he spent locked up as "an eye-opening experience as well as an opportunity to turn a corner" and said that he wanted to devote his time to providing for his son, who was 7 at the time.

Ogarro and his mother grew apart after she and his father separated, and he spiraled into depression after his uncle Duane was shot and killed by police in 2012, Cardi wrote. He turned to drug use, eventually becoming addicted to opioids, she said.

"What matters to me most is family and I feel that I have let mine down," Ogarro wrote the sentencing judge, Richard Sullivan, in January 2020. "When I'm released I'm focusing on being there for my son not just my son but my uncle's son as well. I feel that it is my responsibility to be there for him the way my uncle was there for me."

Ogarro struggled with the terms of his supervised release and was called before Sullivan in October because he kept smoking marijuana and didn't have a job.

In a followup hearing on Dec. 4, he and his lawyer described the progress he'd made in seeking a job and how he was doing 20 hours of community service a week for a church.

Ogarro explained that he helped the pastor with tasks like passing out flyers and assisting with Sunday service.

"Anything he needs, whether it's computers, I help him with that just to further the church," he stated.

At the end of the hearing the judge told him, "Mr. Ogarro, keep up the good work."

DA: Suspect with long rap sheet steals van with baby inside, faces kidnapping charge

BY SHEETAL BANCHARIYA
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

A Bronx man who stole a minivan on Father's Day didn't realize there was a baby in the back until he'd driven off, authorities said.

Victor Matos was arraigned Monday in Bronx Criminal Court on charges including kidnapping, grand larceny, criminal possession of stolen property and acting in a manner injurious to a child.

The suspect stole the vehicle at around 11:30 a.m. near E. 146th St. and Third Ave. in Mott Haven while the baby's mother popped into a bakery to pick up a cake.

The baby's teen brother explained that the cake was for the infant's 6-month birthday celebration. In his initial statement to authorities, Matos said, "I was driving away, and I heard a sound. I got nervous because there is a kid in there."

Panicked, Matos dumped the car on Casanova St. in the Bronx. Prosecutors allege that even after realizing the baby was onboard, he made no effort to return the child, leaving the infant in the back seat. NYPD officers and detectives launched a frantic search for the stolen minivan, the baby and the suspect.

Within a few hours, Matos was in police custody.

"The defendant led the police to the vehicle and, thankfully, the baby was all right and reunited with the mother," said Bronx Assistant District Attorney Juliana Rogers.

It's unclear whether Matos turned himself in or was apprehended. An NYPD spokeswoman confirmed the vehicle was recovered within the 41st Precinct, which covers Hunts Point and Longwood.

Matos has nine prior arrests. In November, he was arrested for a similar incident in the Bronx, where he pretended to direct traffic, got a driver to stop and exit his car, then drove off with it only to crash into two cars parked nearby, according to authorities.

For that incident, he was supposed to report to Rikers Island on Dec. 1, but never showed up.

In March 2023, Matos was busted for grand larceny auto and endangering the welfare of an incompetent person in Suffolk County. After his release from Ulster Correctional Facility in May 2023, he failed to report to the parole office.

Judge Eugene Bowen on Monday set Matos' bail at $100,000 cash, $200,000 company insurance bond or $500,000 partially secured surety bond due for factors including Matos' "criminal history" and "rap sheet."

Matos is due back in court on June 21.

Indian man in plot to kill Sikh leader is extradited to city

BY JOSEPH WILKINSON
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

An Indian man accused of scheming to assassinate a prominent Sikh separatist in New York City has been extradited to the U.S., officials announced Monday.

Nikhil "Nick" Gupta, 52, was arrested nearly a year ago in the Czech Republic and had fought the extradition in court.

However, Czech Justice Minister Pavel Blazek revealed Monday that he had approved the transfer, after Gupta lost his legal challenges last month.

Gupta was booked at Brooklyn's notorious Metropolitan Detention Center, according to online records. He appeared Monday in Manhattan Federal Court and pleaded not guilty.

Federal authorities claim Gupta was a small part of a sprawling operation to kill Sikh leaders in North America. He was hired by an unnamed Indian government official to coordinate an assassination of Gurbatwant Singh Pannun (photo), a leader of Sikhs for Justice, according to court documents.

Gupta contacted someone he believed to be a criminal associate, the feds said. Instead, his contact was an undercover agent with the Drug Enforcement Administration.

When Gupta asked the source to put him in touch with a hit man, the source connected him with another undercover DEA agent, according to investigators. The feds said Gupta agreed to pay $100,000 for the hit and delivered an advance payment of $15,000.

On June 18, 2023, another Sikh separatist leader, Hardeep Singh

Nijjar, was killed by masked gunmen near his house of worship in Surrey, British Columbia, outside Vancouver.

After Nijjar was killed, Gupta's Indian government contact sent him a video of the slain man, the feds said. Gupta told the undercover Drug Enforcement Administration agent that Nijjar was on the same hit list as Pannun, according to charging documents.

About two weeks later, on June 30, Gupta was arrested in the Czech Republic. Federal authorities announced in November that they had unraveled the plot.

India's government has claimed it had nothing to do with the assassination of Nijjar or the plot against Pannun, though both men were designated as "terrorists" by Indian authorities.

Gupta appealed to India for diplomatic help in January, but the nation's top court decided he would not receive any such aid.

Following Nijjar's murder, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said there was "credible evidence" of India's involvement, sparking a diplomatic spat. Since then, four Indian nationals have been arrested in Canada and charged with Nijjar's murder. U.S. officials have not formally made any similar claims about the plot against Pannun.

1 dead, another hurt in S.I. knife fight

One man was killed and another wounded in a Staten Island knife fight Monday, police and sources said.

The men, ages 41 and 37, got into a fight at the corner of Broad and Gordon Sts. outside Island Food Market in Stapleton Heights just after 3:45 p.m.

Both men, armed with knives, took swipes at each other until eventually the older man was stabbed in the chest and the younger in the leg, sources said.

Medics rushed the 41-year-old man to Staten Island University Hospital, but he could not be saved.

The younger man was taken to Richmond University Medical Center, where he was expected to survive his injuries.

The older man's name was not released as cops worked to notify his family of his death.

There were no immediate arrests.

Busted for harassing girl, snatching her hijab

A 40-year-old hatermonger was busted Monday for mocking a teen girl and ripping the hijab off her head, police said.

Robert Pierpont, who has no prior arrest record, was charged with aggravated harassment.

The 17-year-old victim was walking on E. 44th St. approaching Second Ave. around noon on April 28 when she was confronted, police said.

"You don't need to be wearing that here," the suspect yelled before he tore the hijab off her head and ran off, police said.

Police later released photos of the man smiling and then learned his identity.

Your HOROSCOPE

BY TAROT.COM

For Tuesday, June 18

An unusual intensity is surrounding our current emotions. Venus is in the early stages of its tour through security-conscious Cancer, and it will squabble with severe Pluto in rebellious Aquarius. This could make it difficult to grasp the best way to channel our feelings. Fortunately, a trine from the Moon in Scorpio to Saturn in Pisces should help calm our nerves, while another lunar angle to Chiron will encourage healing and personal growth at a natural, healthy pace.

ARIES

MARCH 21-APRIL 19

The urge to assist others could be unusually powerful on a day like this. You may decide to go a step further and do some volunteer work or donate some items that could better serve someone more in need. It's always good to give, but there's rarely been a better time, cosmically speaking, to do it.

LIBRA

SEPT. 23-OCT. 22

Yes, it is possible to take life too easy. Someone might misinterpret your attitude the wrong way or think you're not taking things seriously even if you ultimately are handling things well. Keep up a positive front before allowing yourself to kick back once people aren't keeping a close eye on you.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

There's pleasure everywhere you look — but that isn't all there is to focus on. You're more than happy to stop and smell the roses. A sudden obligation or assignment may snap you out of your reverie, so don't be shocked if someone needs you with the best you've got to offer.

SCORPIO

OCT. 23-NOV. 21

It's tempting to fly far away, but pressing matters may keep you homebound. Perhaps your plans for an exciting day get put on ice by a relative or roommate, or you need to deal with chores around the house before you can dust off your passport. The world will wait.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

You may find yourself questioning certain long-held assumptions or beliefs. It's okay to ask these questions. You deserve time to acclimate to any internal attitude shifts regarding consumerism. Still, don't overthink something that doesn't need to turn your world upside down.

SAGITTARIUS

NOV. 22-DEC. 21

People may pry into your private business without even meaning to. You're possibly prone to keeping your cards close to your chest. It could have everyone blowing up your phone. You can't avoid people easily at this time, so play your cards more carefully than usual.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Your desire for satisfaction may come at a higher cost than usual. You may find yourself checked by someone else's financial concerns. This may involve a debt or loan, or perhaps an issue of inheritance. Specifics aside, you'll probably have to stand up for what you want.

CAPRICORN

DEC. 22-JAN. 19

Money matters may arise in a relationship without warning. There may be an imbalance in an important connection that needs to be equalized. Whatever's going on, this doesn't need to be a completely awkward process. Lead with compassion.

LEO

JULY 23-AUG. 22

You may feel like you're missing something obvious today. Someone may want or expect something from you, but you can't imagine why. On the other hand, perhaps your usually clear feelings are impossible to clarify. You're allowed not to know all the answers.

AQUARIUS

JAN. 20-FEB. 18

Be wary of overreacting to something at present. Someone may do or say something that leaves you scratching your head, only for them not to understand why you don't seem more pleased with the results. Communication is important, but don't twist anyone's arm.

VIRGO

AUG. 23-SEPT. 22

Prior obligations may stand in the way of more exciting activities. You'll probably need to check off a few chores at work before you can meet up with others, or, since this sector also rules your health, you may feel under the weather or more tired than usual. Don't exert yourself unnecessarily.

PISCES

FEB. 19-MARCH 20

A cosmic fog could obscure your path forward. You could be concerned that something is off, even if you don't know what. Don't force yourself to figure out what is going on. Instead, allow yourself to get comfortable in this temporary phase of unknowing. Clarity should arrive soon enough for those with patience.

YANKS BREAKING

Flying high, Yankees still have Birds breathing down their necks in East

BY GARY PHILLIPS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The Yankees woke up with the best record in baseball on Monday, yet they entered the off day with the smallest division lead in the majors.

Only the Yankees have 50 wins through 74 games, but the Orioles are right behind them, as they were tied for the second-best record in the majors. At 47-24, Baltimore is just 1.5 games out of first place in the American League East as it readies for a three-game series in the Bronx, which begins Tuesday.

"It's a really good team," Aaron Boone said. "They're very complete. They've had some injuries happen to their rotation. But their depth has served them well. They continue to get good starting pitching. They've been able to close out games, and they have a versatile and dynamic offense. They can beat you with power. They can beat you with speed. They can match up against you. They got a few guys they platoon with that are impactful against the other hand. So they're a complete team, no doubt."

As Boone mentioned, injuries have decimated the O's rotation. After most recently losing Kyle Bradish, Baltimore will start Albert Suárez, Cade Povich and Cole Irvin against New York's top-ranked offense.

The Yankees, facing baseball's second-best offense in terms of runs scored, will turn to Nestor Cortes on Tuesday. Gerrit Cole will make his season debut on Wednesday before Luis Gil takes the mound on Thursday.

With Cole and Gil starting back-to-back games, the Yankees will get their first look at how they could potentially line up their rotation for a playoff series.

The Yankees and Orioles have already met once this season, as the Bombers dropped 3-of-4 at Camden Yards between April 29 and May 2. Three of those games were decided by two runs, including the Yankees' lone win, and Aaron Judge was still days away from breaking out of his early-season slump.

The slugger was hitting .197 at the end of that series, but he's since slashed a ridiculous .387/.503/.937 with 16 doubles, 20 home runs and 46 RBI over 40 games. Overall, Judge is now batting .299/.425/.686 and leading the majors with 26 home runs and 64 RBI.

"Looking forward to it," Judge said of the rematch. "Another great ballclub. Excited to see them in the Bronx. It's gonna be a fun series. Fans are gonna be excited, so we're looking forward to it after the off day."

With Judge now in top form, he has a chance to pad his home run lead over Baltimore's Gunnar Henderson, who is second in the majors with 22.

The 22-year-old shortstop is working on an MVP-caliber campaign of his own, though the Yankees held him to two hits the last time they faced him. One of those was a home run.

Asked what's stood out the most about Henderson, Boone said, "The level of athlete that he is and the power and speed combination playing in the middle of the diamond, playing a premium position. The ability to hit the ball like a power hitter. And really, really run too, though."

"Just really an explosive athlete playing a premium position with a lot of power."

Henderson can indeed do all of that, and he's not the only Oriole who can run. Baltimore has five players that have swiped at least five bases this season, making them an interesting follow-up after the Red Sox took a weekend series from the Yankees by stealing nine bases on Sunday night.

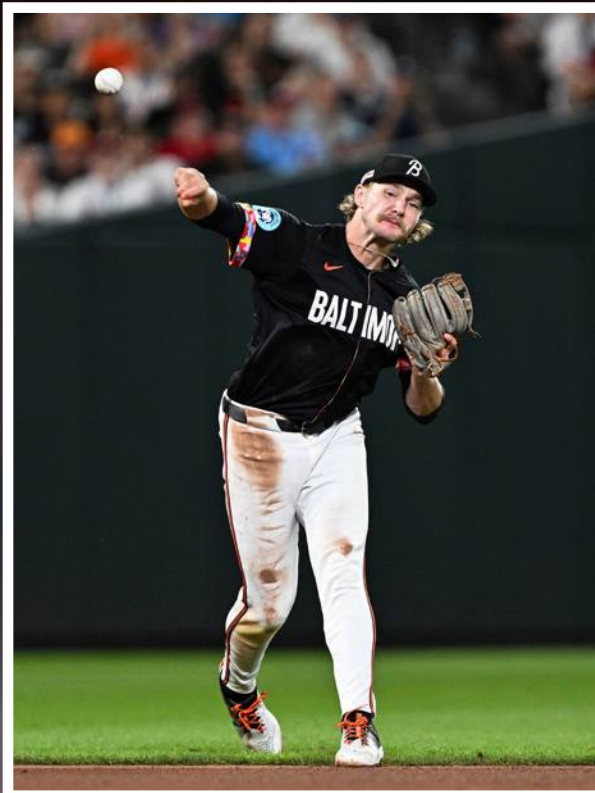

Jose Trevino was behind the plate for all of them.

"I think it's gonna be a good one coming back to the Bronx after a road trip, facing a good team," the catcher said of Baltimore. "It's gonna be fun. It's gonna be a good one."

While the Yankees are coming off their fourth series loss of the season, the Orioles just took 2-of-3 from the National League-leading Phillies. Before that, they did the same to the second-place Braves, who will visit Yankee Stadium later this week.

For now, the Yankees are focused on the Orioles. After losing the series in Baltimore earlier this season, they'll look to return the favor at home.

"That's a series and moment in time," Boone said. "I think both teams have clearly established themselves as really formidable. But at the same time, it's a marathon. That cliché is very true: we got a long way to go in all of this. All we can say right now is both teams are really good, really dangerous and with a lot of potential."

OUT THE BIG GUN

Cole to make his season debut when MLB-best Bombers host 2nd-place Orioles on Wednesday

BY GARY PHILLIPS
 NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Gerrit Cole is ready for The Show.

After three successful rehab starts, the Yankees' ace will make his 2024 debut this Wednesday night against the Orioles at Yankee Stadium. Aaron Boone announced the anticipated decision during his weekly appearance on the Talkin' Yanks podcast on Monday.

Cole, sidelined by elbow inflammation midway through spring training, recorded a 0.73 ERA, 19 strikeouts and zero walks over 12.1 innings and three minor league starts. The first two rehab outings came with Double-A Somerset.

Cole most recently totaled two hits, one run (zero earned), zero walks, 10 strikeouts and 70 pitches over 4.1 innings for Triple-A Scranton/Wilkes-Barre on Friday.

"I feel really good today, and I felt really good last night," Cole said Saturday in Boston.

"It feels like it's coming together... The closer and closer you get, the more excited you get."

Cole will not be fully built up when he returns to the Yankees, but they'll happily take 80-85 pitches from the reigning American League Cy Young with the second-place Orioles in town.

That's not to say the Yankees' rotation has faltered in Cole's absence. In fact, the opposite is true, as Yankees starters have a 2.90 ERA this season. No rotation has been better in that regard.

Cole will join a staff that has been led by Luis Gil, who has broken out after winning the fifth rotation spot that Cole's injury vacated. Nestor Cortes, Carlos Rodón and Marcus Stroman have also put together strong seasons, though the latter two struggled in Boston over the weekend.

With Clarke Schmidt on the injured list, Cole will likely replace Cody Poteet in the rotation. The righty has been solid, recording a 2.14 ERA over four starts this season. However, Poteet has options and can stay built up as a starter at Triple-A.

Mookie Betts goes down, suffering broken hand when he's hit by pitch Sunday. GETTY

Betts' broken hand deals another blow to Dodgers

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Significant injuries continue to hamper the Dodgers.

Mookie Betts became the latest star to go down after a hit-by-pitch in Sunday's win against the Royals left him with a broken left hand.

Betts dropped to the ground in pain immediately after a 97.9-mph fastball from Kansas City's Dan Altavilla struck him near the top of the hand in the seventh inning of the 3-0 victory.

The Dodgers do not know how long Betts will be out, but he won't require surgery, according to manager Dave Roberts. Betts was placed on the injured list Monday.

"It's going to be time," Roberts said. "I don't know what that means."

Betts, 31, planned to visit hand specialist Dr. Steven Shin on Monday.

"I think that's the first time I got hit in the hand, so I wasn't sure (if it was broken)," Betts said. "I just went numb and it hurt. Unfortunately, it's broke. There's nothing really we can do now."

Through Sunday, Betts ranked fourth among MLB hitters with a .405 on-base percentage, ninth with a .304 batting average and 12th with an .893 OPS.

A six-time Gold Glove winner in right field, Betts moved to shortstop this season. He started 72 of the Dodgers' first 73 games, batting leadoff in each appearance.

"It's a big blow," Roberts said. "I feel really bad for Mookie. He was obviously having an MVP-type season. It's very unfortunate. You've got to move on, and that's what we're going to do."

With Betts out, Roberts said he planned to move Shohei Ohtani into the leadoff spot and expected veteran Miguel Rojas to fill in at shortstop.

The injury to Betts, who finished second in National League MVP voting last year, occurred hours after the Dodgers placed rookie ace Yoshinobu Yamamoto on the 15-day injured list with a strained rotator cuff.

The Japanese-born Yamamoto joined the Dodgers in December on a 12-year, $325 million contract — the largest, in terms of total value, ever given to a pitcher.

Yamamoto exited Saturday's game against the Royals after two scoreless innings, which lowered his ERA to 2.92. That was his first start since he hurled seven shutout innings against the Yankees in the Bronx on June 7.

The right-hander, 25, is not going to throw for a couple of weeks, according to Roberts, who said the injury is not season-ending.

Yamamoto's strain dealt another blow to a Dodgers rotation that has been without longtime ace Clayton Kershaw, who is nearing his 2024 debut after offseason shoulder surgery. Tony Gonsolin underwent Tommy John surgery in February; while fellow starter Dustin May is working his way back from last year's elbow operation.

Despite the injuries, the Dodgers entered Monday with a 44-29 record and an eight-game lead in the NL West. Betts' absence could complicate the Dodgers' pursuit of one of the NL's first-round playoff byes, however, as Los Angeles began the day behind the Phillies and the Brewers.

Betts won American League MVP in 2018 with Boston, making him one of three former MVPs in the Dodgers' lineup. Ohtani and Freddie Freeman are the others. Kershaw, meanwhile, won NL MVP and one of his three Cy Young Awards in 2014.

"I'll be watching the boys, cheering them on," Betts said Sunday. "Other than that, it's just kind of rest, maybe use it as a mental break and be ready to go whenever it heals up."

RIZZO LOST TO BROKEN ARM

Collision in Boston proves costly with 1B expected to miss at least 4-6 weeks

Anthony Rizzo has struggled at plate, but loss of first baseman is still big blow to Yankees, who face second-place Orioles this week.

BY GARY PHILLIPS
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Anthony Rizzo is not expected back any time soon after the Yankees' first baseman collided with Red Sox reliever Brennan Bernardino on Sunday night and broke his arm.

Rizzo suffered a fracture to the radial neck of his right arm, according to The Athletic. While he doesn't need surgery, he could miss four to six weeks.

Rizzo, running out a groundball, collided with Bernardino at first base as the pitcher dropped a throw in the seventh inning of Boston's 9-3 win. The two banged hips, but Rizzo landed on his arm and grabbed it while lying on the ground.

"When he didn't get up right away, I could tell he was in some pain down on the ground," Aaron Boone said Sunday. "So obviously concern there."

Boone had hoped Rizzo avoided a serious injury when an initial low-grade x-ray came back clean on Sunday, but the manager noted that the veteran's arm felt pain "in a number of places."

Further imaging revealed the fracture on Monday.

With Rizzo bound for the injured list, it's unclear how the Yankees will fill his roster spot.

DJ LeMahieu can play first, which would create more opportunities for Oswaldo Cabrera at third. At Triple-A, there's Ben Rice, the Yankees' 12th-best prospect, and T.J. Rumfield.

Both farmhands are having strong seasons offensively, but neither is on the Yankees' 40-man roster. A catcher by trade, Rice has limited experience at first and at Triple-A. Rumfield, meanwhile, won a Gold Glove at Double-A last season.

Because LeMahieu can handle the position, the Yankees don't necessarily have to promote a first baseman. Instead, they could call up Oswald Peraza or add someone like the versatile Kevin Smith to the 40-man roster. Those options wouldn't excite fans as much as a Rice promotion, but the Yankees would likely only go that route if they're willing to play the 25-year-old every day.

The Yankees could also acquire a corner infielder before next month's trade deadline. That possibility existed before Rizzo's injury, since he and LeMahieu haven't offered much production at the plate this season.

Rizzo is hitting .223/.289/.341 with eight home runs, 28 RBI and a 79 OPS+. He was benched for two games last week while in the midst of a 1-for-29 slump.

LeMahieu is slashing .188/.304/.188 with zero extra-base hits after making his season debut on May 28 following a foot fracture.

While Rizzo is avoiding surgery, this is the second year in a row his season has been derailed by a collision at first base. Last year, Rizzo was on defense when San Diego's Fernando Tatis Jr. bumped into him on a pickoff play.

That left Rizzo with post-concussion symptoms, which he unknowingly played through for two months before getting shut down in August.

Rizzo largely hasn't been the same player since, though he insisted he was healthy this season before Sunday's injury.

Martinez named NL Player of the Week after monster run

ARLINGTON — J.D. Martinez put the Mets on his back with his first career walk-off home run last week and he's carried them ever since. A monster week at the plate not only keyed a five-game winning streak for the Mets but also earned the veteran designated hitter National League Player of the Week honors, the league announced Monday ahead of the Mets' opening game against the Texas Rangers.

Martinez hit .450 (9-for-20) with three home runs, nine RBI, three doubles, six walks and five runs in six games last week. He posted a 1.050 slugging percentage and .593 on-base percentage, leading the league in OPS (1.643) over that timespan. He also led all NL hitters in on-base percentage, tied the NL lead in walks, extra-base hits and total bases.

"Impressive, but that's what special hitters do," manager Carlos Mendoza said at Globe Life Field. "To see him get hot like that, he can carry a team."

This is what the Mets envisioned when they signed the 36-year-old to a heavily backloaded one-year $12 million contract late in spring training. Beyond his power prowess, the Mets knew he could be an impactful player in the lineup for many reasons. They liked his winning pedigree, having been a member of the 2018 World Series-winning Boston Red Sox team and they like that he can wear down opposing pitchers even when he doesn't get hits.

When he does hit, it's usually timely. His calling card has long been his opposite-field power, something that was on full display Saturday when he clubbed a pair of homers to right-center field against the San Diego Padres at Citi Field.

"I'm a big guy that hits the ball to the opposite field well for [slugging percentage]," he said over the weekend. "I feel like that's a recipe for driving in runs. There's really not an art to it. It's just doing that, and doing it consistently and not letting the pressure get to you. And for me, I like to pretend like no one's on base every time I'm up. Just doesn't matter."

Martinez has been a levelheaded voice in the clubhouse during trying times, bringing some of the veteran leadership the Mets hoped for.

"I love to hit, I love to play ball," he said. I know that I prepare, I know that I do everything I can possibly do to get ready for every bat. So if it works out, it's great. If it doesn't, there's nothing else I would change. I know I did everything I possibly could. So for me, I really don't put pressure on [myself] to perform or whatever like that."

His message has resonated with the Mets as they're playing looser, freer and enjoying baseball again after a dismal stretch last month.

MAD MAX MAKING A RETURN

Former Mets ace Max Scherzer has completed rehab for his herniated disk surgery and will make his next start in the big leagues, but it will be too late to face his old team. The right-hander, who was traded to the Rangers at the deadline for infielder Luisangel Acuña last summer, caught up with the Mets after they arrived in Arlington.

Scherzer praised owner Steve Cohen saying he enjoyed playing for him. He infamously refused to waive his no-trade protection with the Mets last summer, but eventually came around to the idea of playing for Texas, citing the team's desire to win and easy access for his family to their South Florida home.

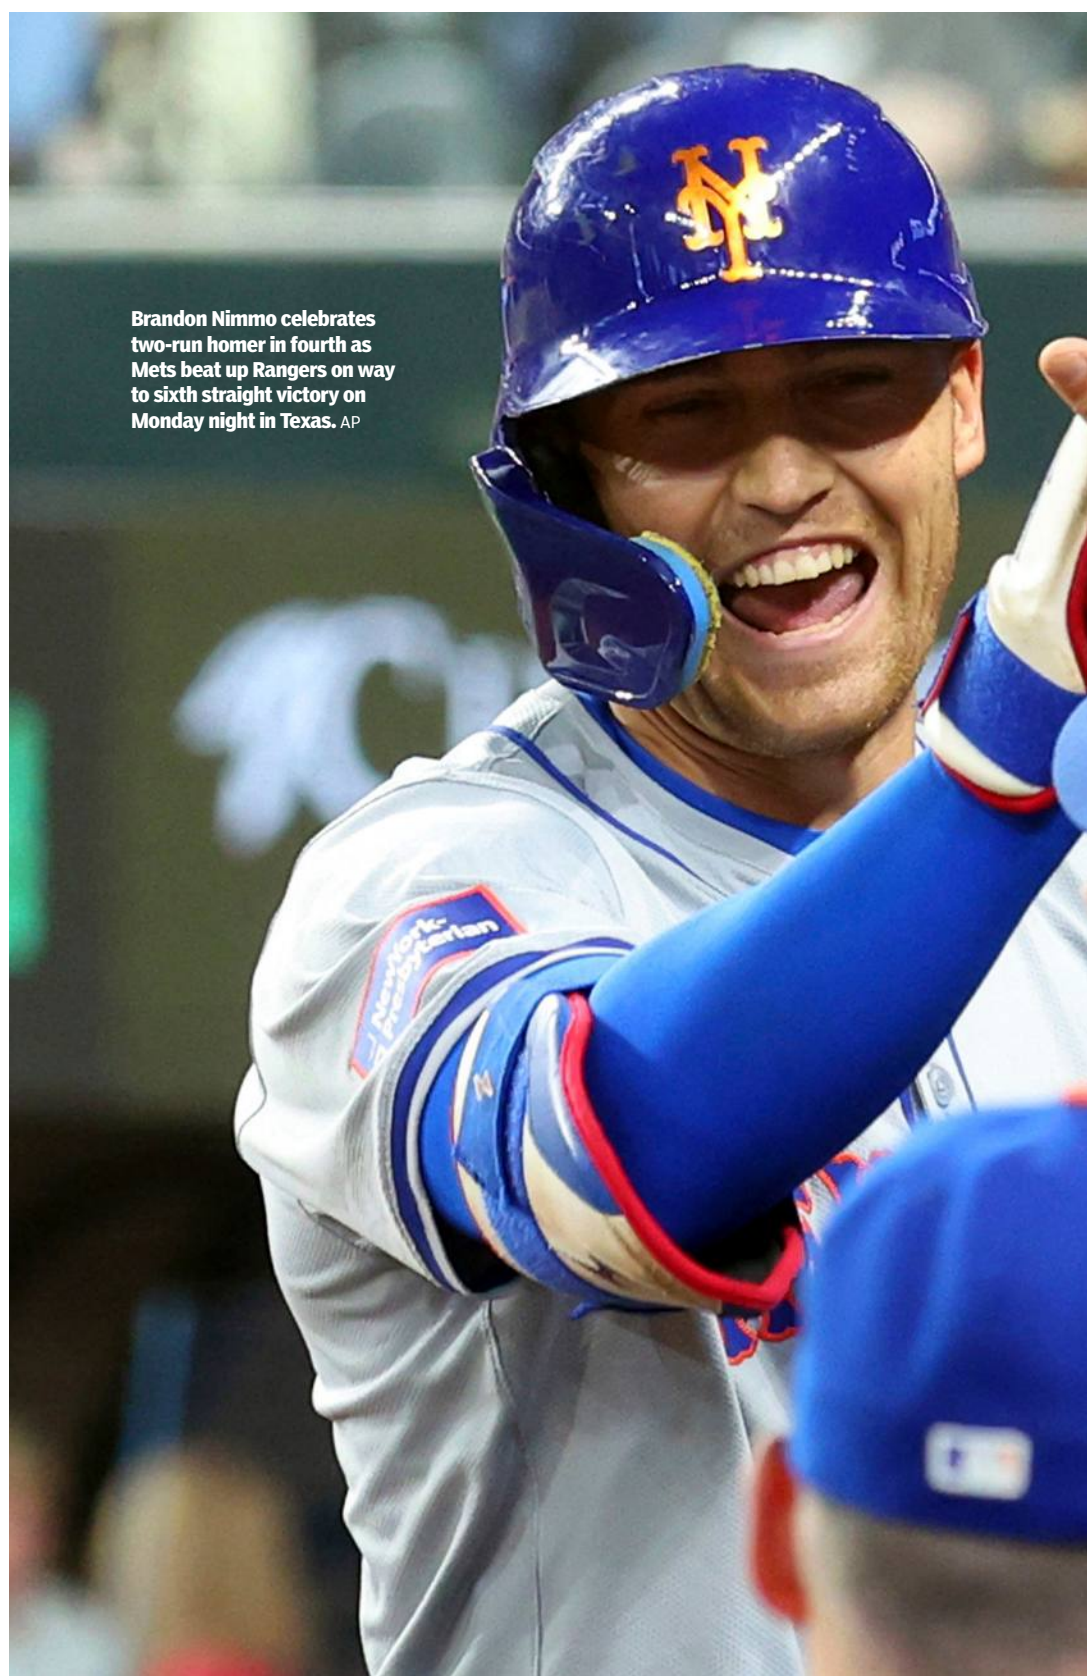

"It was a baseball decision," Scherzer said. "With everything that went down, decisions had to be made around that. It's unfortunate I was in that position, but everybody had to make a baseball decision on all sides and for me, it worked out well."

Scherzer helped the Rangers win their first-ever World Series title but hasn't pitched since.

Brandon Nimmo celebrates two-run homer in fourth as Mets beat up Rangers on way to sixth straight victory on Monday night in Texas. AP

BY ABBEY MASTRACCO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

ARLINGTON — They say everything is bigger in Texas. It proved to be true for the Mets' offense Monday night.

The Mets won their sixth straight with a 14-2 rout of the Texas Rangers at Globe Life Field in the opening game of a three-game set and a six-game road trip. They set a new season-high for hits with 22. Every member of the starting lineup recorded at least one, with the exception of Tyrone Taylor, who still reached base (hit by pitch).

Francisco Lindor recorded his fourth four-hit game of the season, going 4-for-4 with a double, two RBI and three runs scored. Brandon Nimmo went 3-for-4 with a two-run homer (his eighth of the season), four RBI and two runs. Pete Alonso, Mark Vientos and Francisco Alvarez recorded three hits, and DJ Stewart went 2-for-6 with a three-run homer (No. 5 this season).

J.D. Martinez extended his on-base streak to 20 games, going 1-for-4 before the Mets pinch-hit for him with Luis Torrens.

The Mets (34-37) were relentless against the Rangers (33-39), chasing starter Jon Gray from the game after just three innings. Down 7-2 after the Mets scored one in the first inning and six in the second, the right-hander started the fourth before giving up a leadoff single to Lindor and a homer to Nimmo. Texas then went to right-hander Jonathan Hernandez, who struck out three, pitching around a single by Alonso.

But the Mets beat up on Hernandez as well, scoring twice in the fifth and once in the sixth before the Rangers finally pulled him with one on and two out. Right-hander Cole Winn was effective in mop-up duty in the seventh, but after the bottom of the Mets' order produced two more runs in the top of the eighth, Texas decided to save its bullpen. They used catcher Andrew Knizner for the third out in the eighth and again in the ninth.

Left-hander David Peterson limited the Rangers to two earned runs on four hits over six innings. He walked three and struck out six in the win, his third of the season in only four starts (3-0). Right-hander Adam Ottavino threw two scoreless innings of relief and Drew Smith, who grew up near Fort Worth in a small town called Crowley and played college ball at Dallas Baptist University, pitched the ninth inning in front of a hometown crowd.

It was a true team win with contributions up and down the lineup and on the defensive side of the ball. The Mets are one win away from tying their early-season seven-game win streak, but comebacks and luck more than anything else characterized that streak. The length of the lineup is giving pitchers fits right now and the bullpen is locking down leads.

This is the type of baseball the Mets envisioned they would play with this roster.

Three former Mets watched from the home dugout: Outfielder Travis Jankowski and former aces Max Scherzer and Jacob deGrom, the latter of which was so eager to leave New York as a free agent after the 2022 season. If ever the Mets were going to make a statement, this was as good of a time and place as any to make it.

DeGrom still working way back to Rangers' rotation after surgery

BY ABBEY MASTRACCO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

ARLINGTON — Stop me if you've heard this one: Jacob deGrom threw off a mound for the first time this season Monday. It's a familiar storyline for a familiar player in an unfamiliar place.

This time, deGrom wasn't throwing in the Citi Field bullpen to one of their two longtime bullpen catchers. The two-time Cy Young Award winner wore blue, but there was no orange to be found.

At this point, it might be hard to remember the deGrom that dazzled in New York. It's hard to remember that the Mets once had arguably the best pitcher in the world. DeGrom was barely visible his last few years in Flushing, as injuries to his right elbow, right shoulder, neck, back, side and forearm limited him to only 38 starts over his final three seasons with the Mets.

After spurning the team that drafted him to sign a five-year, $185 million pact with the Texas Rangers in December 2022, deGrom made only six starts before disaster struck once again and he underwent a second Tommy John surgery.

But Monday afternoon at Globe Life Field, deGrom was no longer a figment of the imagination as he threw 15 fastballs and then drew a crowd in the home dugout, along with another injured former Mets ace, Max Scherzer.

"I'm not sure of the timeline, but I'm feeling really good," he said. "I touched the mound for the first time today, so that went really well. One day at a time, I've got two more times this week, and then just need to keep moving forward from there."

This is the first time deGrom has seen the Mets since he left Queens following the Mets' disappointing Game 3 loss in the NL Wild Card round in October 2022. When the Rangers visited New York last year, they came without deGrom, who was rehabbing from Tommy John. He caught up with former teammates Brandon Nimmo, Adam Ottavino, Pete Alonso and Edwin Diaz before the first game of the series, with pitching coach Jeremy Hefner joining the group in the outfield as well.

"I keep in touch with those guys," he said. "Those guys are lifelong friends."

Why he left is still a mystery, and probably will remain one given deGrom's notoriously reclusive nature. He doesn't care for the spotlight, despite how he itches when it's on him, and he doesn't care for media attention. His departure still stings for many in Queens, but fans have reconciled with the fact not only is he gone, but he isn't contributing for Texas either.

Injuries are as much a part of his legacy with the Mets as his successes. There were persistent questions about whether or not he even wanted to pitch and whether or not he wanted to be in New York by the time he announced that he would opt out of the final year of his contract to become a free agent in 2023.

It matters little now. He's working toward a return to the mound and seemed optimistic about this latest step forward.

"I've been through this before so I knew what to expect," he said. "I knew it was a long road, so the main thing was to try to be smart and not to do too much. We've been sticking with the program."

If deGrom is harboring any ill will about the Mets organization, he isn't vocalizing it. The Mets took a chance on a converted college shortstop and helped mold him into an ace. He's grateful for the Mets, though clearly ready to move on from the narrative that followed him in New York.

"I'm forever thankful for the Mets organization," deGrom said. "I've said that before. They drafted me and I spent nine years of my career there. I definitely enjoyed my time there, and when I was a Met my goal was to put the team in a position to win and leave it all out on the field, and that's what I tried to do every fifth day."

"I'm thankful for the opportunity that the organization gave me."

Crowd erupts early and often Monday night in Boston as Celtics roll to record 18th championship. GETTY

NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

At the advent of each NBA season, teams across the league dream about the possibility of hoisting the Larry O’Brien Championship Trophy on their home court. And after an embarrassing 38-point loss in Game 4 of the NBA Finals last Friday in Dallas, the Celtics were handed that invaluable opportunity.

This time, the Celtics, inside TD Garden with their loyal fans behind them, were ready for the moment. And the sense of desperation that carried the Mavericks into Game 5 was mostly absent.

A key sequence in the final minute of the opening quarter set the tone for Boston. It started with a Sam Hauser 3-pointer, followed by a steal from Hauser — courtesy of an errant pass by Luka Doncic — leading to a layup for Jaylen Brown at the other end. Moments later, Jayson Tatum ripped the ball from P.J. Washington near mid-court, took it straight to the rim and finished an uncontested layup. That bucket put the Celtics up by 10 points entering the second quarter. A 49-foot bomb from Payton Pritchard at the second-quarter buzzer gave them a 21-point advantage at halftime. True champions can adapt to anything — even a blowout loss to the same opponent just one game prior. After getting completely decimated in Dallas, the Celtics responded with a barrage of their own, dismantling the Mavericks, 106-88, to claim their 18th NBA

Celtics take apart Mavs for 18th title championship. And with its first title since the 2007-08 season, Boston has now won more championships than any other NBA franchise, breaking a tie with the Lakers.

"What they gon' say now?" Tatum said in his walk-off interview.

Tatum was spectacular in the biggest game of his career, finishing with 31 points, eight rebounds and 11 assists. Brown, his longtime running mate, added 21 points, eight rebounds and six assists and was named Finals MVP.

Meanwhile, Dallas' star duo of Doncic and Kyrie Irving struggled, shooting a combined 17-of-41 from the field. Remember, there used to be a narrative that Tatum and Brown would never win a championship together.

After a dominant regular season, capped off by a masterful championship run, it is safe to say they have finally silenced their skeptics.

Now Jets and Giants go quiet (maybe) until things really start up

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

There has been no shortage of intrigue around the Jets and Giants' quarterbacks rooms in recent months — for very different reasons.

An offseason that began with swirling speculation about the Giants' draft plans has since turned its focus to the unexcused — and, for the most part, unexplained — absence of Aaron Rodgers at the Jets' mandatory minicamp last week.

Also drawing attention were Rodgers' potential candidacy as Robert F. Kennedy Jr.'s presidential running mate; Daniel Jones' progress in his recovering from a season-ending ACL tear; and the Jets trading away Zach Wilson three years after drafting him No. 2 overall.

It's certainly made for an interesting offseason.

Rodgers, whose debut season with the Jets ended with an Achilles tear four plays into Week 1 last September, made the first headline off the offseason in January when he stressed the importance of eliminating distractions.

"Flush the bulls—," Rodgers said on Jan. 8.

"Anything in this building that we're doing, individually or collectively, that has nothing to do with real winning needs to be assessed."

Two months later, reports emerged that Kennedy, an independent candidate and a notorious vaccine skeptic, was considering Rodgers to run as his vice president.

Rodgers later confirmed having "a few nice conversations" with Kennedy.

"But there were really two options," Rodgers, 40, said last month. "It was retire and be his VP, or keep playing, and I want to keep playing."

Rodgers participated in the Jets' voluntary offseason program this spring, but his absence last Tuesday and Wednesday at mandatory OTAs came as a surprise.

The Jets have not specified where Rodgers was, prompting speculation to run rampant.

Robert Saleh and teammates, including Sauce Gardner, have downplayed the significance of Rodgers missing minicamp.

"Aaron and I spoke before OTAs started," Saleh said. "He has been good with communication and has been here the entire time. It's unexcused, but he had an event that was very important to him."

With Rodgers away, the offense ran last week under backup quarterback Tyrod Taylor, who joined the Jets in the offseason after two years with the Giants.

Taylor's addition gave the Jets a more-established backup than Wilson, who went 12-21 as a starter and passed for 23 touchdowns against 25 interceptions in his three seasons. Wilson's tumultuous tenure came to an end in April when the Jets traded him to the Broncos as part of a late-round pick swap.

The Giants, meanwhile, replaced Taylor with Drew Lock as the backup to Jones, who remains the starting quarterback after the team declined to select anyone at the position in April's draft.

Big Blue did, however, do considerable homework on prominent quarterback prospects before the draft.

Those included Drake Maye, who went No. 3 overall to the Patriots, and J.J. McCarthy, who went 10th to the Vikings.

The Giants reportedly tried to trade up to select Maye but ultimately remained at No. 6 and took explosive wide receiver Malik Nabers. McCarthy was still on the board at the time.

Asked about the Giants' quarterback pursuit, Jones said last month, "Yeah, I mean, I wasn't fired up about it."

"But I think that it's part of it at this level," Jones said. "What I can do is focus on myself and getting healthy (and) playing the best football I can play, that I know I'm capable of playing. That's my job, and that's what I'm gonna do."

Jones, 26, is entering the second season of the four-year, $160 million contract he signed with the Giants before the 2023 season. Jones led the Giants to the playoffs in 2022 but played in only six games last season due to a neck injury and the ACL tear. The Giants can get out of his contract with a palatable cap hit after the 2024 season.

After participating in 7-on-7 and individual drills at Tuesday's minicamp practice, Jones said he expects to be ready for the start of training camp next month.

"The knee feels good. Really good," Jones said Tuesday. "Every week, I've continued to feel better and better and taken steps. I'm doing a lot of the same things I've been doing but doing them better and feeling sharper, cleaner with a lot of my cuts."

"Kind of working on getting that explosiveness back and then taking steps and improving my change of direction and cutting from even where it was before the injury."

With the 2024 NBA season coming to a close, what is expected to be a frenetic and active Knicks offseason will be under way soon.

The Knicks have a number of priorities as they look to build on their second consecutive second-round playoff appearance:

TRADE ONE OR BOTH 2024 FIRST-ROUND DRAFT PICKS

The Knicks are in championship contention mode, which means rookies are unlikely to crack a rotation laden with deep, veteran talent, especially under head coach Tom Thibodeau.

The Knicks own picks Nos. 24 and 25 in the June 26 NBA Draft, and those picks are more valuable in trade discussions as actual picks than they are as freshly drafted players.

However, the front office has also been adept at identifying talent late in drafts: Immanuel Quickley and Quentin Grimes were 25th-overall picks in their respective draft classes, and Miles McBride and Jericho Sims were both second-round finds.

It's difficult to fathom the Knicks using both first-round picks to bolster the roster, which makes it more likely the team trades at least one. It's never a bad idea, however, to keep a pick in case a player the team likes falls down the draft order.

LOCK IN JALEN BRUNSON

Brunson will become eligible this summer to sign a four-year contract extension in New York that will bring the overall value of his deal to a total of five years worth $186 million. But with another year left on his deal before the ability to test free agency, Brunson can also bet on himself, play an additional season in New York, then sign a more lucrative five-year deal worth $270 million next summer.

Brunson became a first-time All-Star and earned Second Team All-NBA honors with the Knicks last season. If he is willing to take less money to lock in financial stability this summer, the Knicks will lock in the deal and have the head of their snake in place for the next five seasons.

RE-SIGN HEAD COACH TOM THIBODEAU

Thibodeau finished fifth in NBA Coach of the Year voting behind Oklahoma City's Mark Daigneault, Orlando's Jamahl Mosley, Minnesota's Chris Finch and Boston's Joe Mazzulla, but there's a strong case to be made Thibodeau deserved top-three standing in the award race given the injuries ravaging Madison Square Garden last season.

Missing Julius Randle the entire second half of the season, Mitchell Robinson a large portion of the regular season and the entire second round of the playoffs, and OG Anunoby both for regular-season and playoff stretches, the Knicks still secured the Eastern Conference's No. 2 seed and pushed the Indiana Pacers to Game 7 in Round 2 before running out of gas in the elimination match.

Maintaining the culture should be top priority in New York, and Thibodeau is a culture driver whose results speak for themselves. Entering the final year of his contract, keeping Thibs in orange and blue should be a no-brainer.

RE-SIGN OG ANUNOBY

The Knicks did not trade RJ Barrett, Immanuel Quickley, and the 31st pick in the upcoming NBA Draft for a half-season rental.

Yet it's the situation the Knicks find themselves in: All indications point to OG Anunoby declining the $19.9 million player option on the final year of his deal and seeking a pay raise as a free agent.

The Knicks need to ensure Anunoby gets that raise at Madison Square Garden, as there will be no shortage of suitors interested in poaching the three-and-D wing's services from New York.

The Knicks went 12-2 in Anunoby's first 14 games after the trade, finished the regular season 20-3 in games he did not miss due to his elbow injury, then went 6-2 through the first eight games of the playoffs before Anunoby severely injured his hamstring in Game 2 against the Pacers.

Injuries may be a concern, but there is no questioning his impact, and Anunoby's impact propelled the Knicks into dark horse contender status in the second half of the season.

Mitchell Robinson's ankle can't be trusted, and Isaiah Hartenstein may leave New York for a bigger pay day elsewhere. And if he doesn't, the Knicks will be paying two centers significant money.

One of the toughest decisions the front office must make is choosing a path forward at the five.

Robinson underwent two procedures to repair a stress fracture in his left ankle last season alone, an unfortunate and unceremonious end to a dominant start to the regular season where he manhandled the offensive glass before turning his foot in a Dec. 8 matchup against the Boston Celtics. He has appeared in fewer than 60 games in three of the last four seasons and has appeared in just 31 games twice during this stretch.

The Knicks had an injury insurance policy in the form of Hartenstein, who thrived in the

NO TIME FOR SUMMER VACATION

Knicks have plenty to do this offseason, with extending Brunson's deal at the top of the to-do list starting center role with Robinson out, then retained the starting spot when Robinson returned from injury.

The Knicks own Hartenstein's Early Bird rights, which means they can exceed the salary cap to re-sign him to a deal worth a 70 percent raise on his previous salary, or a four-year, $72.5 million deal. Hartenstein, however, may have played himself into a competing offer elsewhere the likes of which the Knicks cannot match.

If Hartenstein is willing to take less money to stay in New York, do the Knicks keep Robinson despite his checkered injury history? The team believes the combination of Robinson and Hartenstein is one of, if not outright the best one-two punch at the center spot in all of basketball.

The Knicks, however, are also notably going star hunting, and Robinson, who is due $27 million over the next two seasons, could be included in a deal if the right player becomes available.

MAKE A DECISION ON JULIUS RANDLE

Like Brunson, Randle has another year left on his contract but becomes eligible for a contract extension this summer.

Unlike Brunson, the general consensus is that Randle is not untouchable, that the Knicks would be willing to part ways with the three-time

Long-term success for the Knicks depends largely on the team's ability to lock in Jalen Brunson, OG Anunoby (above) and coach Tom Thibodeau (l.), who each played big roles in the run to the second round of the playoffs this season. AP, GETTY

All-Star if a better-fitting star became available on the market.

The issue is Randle dislocated his shoulder on Jan. 27, an injury that ended his season after solid returns following the Dec. 30 Anunoby deal. Randle was not a black hole with the basketball, as had been his reputation in seasons past, after Anunoby's arrival.

Last season, he averaged 24 points, nine rebounds and five assists prior to his injury. The only players to average at least that stat line either already won Most Valuable Player of the Year in the past (Philadelphia's Joel Embiid, Denver's Nikola Jokic and Milwaukee's Giannis Antetokounmpo) or will win it in the future: Dallas' Luka Doncic.

The question mark remains his ability to carry this impact into the playoffs. Randle struggled mightily in his first playoff run in 2021, played injured through two rounds in 2023, then missed last season's run altogether due to his dislocated shoulder.

IMPROVE THE ROSTER

Here's what's going to happen this summer and next season:

- The 76ers are going to add another piece around the duo of Joel Embiid and Tyrese Maxey

- The Milwaukee Bucks will likely be back, this time with a healthy Giannis Antetokounmpo and Damian Lillard

- The Atlanta Hawks somehow landed the No. 1 pick in this year's NBA Draft and could take a massive leap up the standings

- The Orlando Magic are one piece away from becoming a legitimate team in the playoff conversation

- The Pacers just made it to the Eastern Conference Finals and will try to find a way to add to the duo of Tyrese Haliburton and Pascal Siakam

- And the Miami Heat will find a way to get better, because they somehow always find a way to stay in the championship conversation

The Knicks need more wings who can shoot the three and defend multiple positions. They could use another backup guard behind Brunson and McBride. They could use a stretch-five, too.

Or they could use a world-beating superstar should one become available.

One thing is for certain: This front office is going to do what it takes to improve the roster and put New York in position to hang its first banner since 1973.

St. John's athletic director out

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mike Cragg is out as St. John's athletic director in what the school described Monday as a mutual parting.

Cragg had taken over the role in 2018 and hired Rick Pitino as basketball coach last year. St. John's, which hasn't received an NCAA Tournament bid since 2019, went 20-13 and rejected an NIT invitation in Pitino's debut season.

"It has been an honor to lead the athletic department at St. John's University," Cragg said in a statement released by the school. "I am proud of what we have accomplished together and am confident that the department is in a strong position for continued success."

"As I bid farewell to St. John's, I extend my gratitude to our passionate fans and loyal alumni whose support has been the bedrock of our community. I am profoundly thankful for the dedicated and incredible staff of administrators and coaches whose commitment has propelled us forward. Most importantly, I celebrate our remarkable student-athletes, whose hard work and spirit have been a constant source of inspiration. Together, we have achieved great things, and I will forever cherish our shared journey."

St. John's won six Big East championships across various sports during Cragg's tenure. Sixteen teams received Big East academic excellence awards for posting the highest cumulative GPA in the league for their respective sports.

"We thank Mike for his leadership and all of his contributions to the University community," said the Rev. Brian J. Shanley, president of St. John's. "He strengthened the foundation for the continued success of St. John's Athletics and its student-athletes while always representing the University in a first-class manner."

Before coming to St. John's, Cragg had been Duke's deputy athletic director and chief operating officer, which had him overseeing facilities and planning for all of the Blue Devils teams. Cragg also had been the senior administrator for the Duke men's basketball program.

As run-ins with Caitlin Clark continue, Angel Reese picks up a flagrant foul, but insists she is just making basketball plays. GETTY

Angel insists she's no devil after Caitlin foul

BY PETER SBLENDORIO
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

Angel Reese defended her flagrant foul against Caitlin Clark as a "basketball play" and took issue with the officiating after Sunday's game added another chapter to the rivalry between the touted rookies.

Reese was assessed a flagrant 1 after her swipe struck a driving, airborne Clarke in the head during the third quarter of the Indiana Fever's 91-83 victory over the Chicago Sky.

"I can't control the refs," said Reese, whom the Sky drafted No. 7 overall in April. "They affected the game, obviously, a lot tonight."

"I'm always going for the ball," she said. "But y'all are going to play that clip, what, 20 times before Monday?"

The flagrant was one of five fouls assessed to Reese, who shook her head from the bench after a video review led to the call being upgraded from a common foul.

"I think we went up really strong a lot of times and we didn't get a lot of calls," Reese said. "Going back and looking at the film, I've seen a lot of calls that weren't made. I guess some people got a special whistle."

The fouls compounded a frustrating day for Reese, who finished with 11 points on 4-of-13 shooting in what was the Sky's fourth consecutive loss.

"It's just part of basketball," Clark said of Reese's flagrant. "It is what it is. Trying to make a play on the ball and get the block. I mean, it happens."

Reese's foul occurred just over two weeks after Sky teammate Chennedy Carter body-checked Clark to the ground when the ball was not in play, which was also later upgraded to a flagrant 1.

Carter's foul sparked a national debate about whether Clark's teammates should be coming to her defense as veteran defenders repeatedly welcomed the rookie to the WNBA with persistent physicality.

Clark, the No. 1 overall pick in April's draft, has followed up a record-setting four years at Iowa with an uneven start to her professional career. The 22-year-old guard leads the Fever (5-10) with 16.1 points and 6.2 assists per game but is shooting just 38.3%. Her 5.5 turnovers per game lead the WNBA by a wide margin.

Clark delivered one of her best games as a pro on Sunday, scoring 23 points on 7-of-11 shooting to go with eight rebounds and nine assists.

Liberty's Cup championship moved to UBS

BY FIIFI FRIMPONG
NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

The Commissioner's Cup championship game between the Minnesota Lynx and Liberty on June 25 has been moved from Barclays Center to UBS Arena on Long Island, the league announced Monday.

With the NBA draft set to take place at Barclays Center on June 26, the venue is unable to host the Commissioner's Cup Final a day prior.

"With the scheduling of the NBA draft at Barclays Center on June 26, the NBA created an unavoidable conflict for use of the building," NBA spokesman Mike Bass said. "We are working closely with the New York Liberty on this one-game relocation to UBS Arena and to provide the best possible experience for attendees and participants at the WNBA Commissioner's Cup championship. We apologize for any inconvenience to the Liberty's season ticket holders and loyal fans."

When schedules were released, the Liberty contacted the WNBA about the potential arena conflict, a source familiar with the situation told the Daily News. And when the Liberty clinched home-court advantage for the in-season tournament title game earlier this month, the team offered to play the July 2 regular-season matchup against the Lynx as the championship game, a source said.

Making that matchup a Commissioner's Cup title game would've avoided both teams from adding another game to an already dense schedule. The Lynx, however, declined the offer, a source said.

The source added the league gave the Liberty the option of playing the title game in Minnesota. The Liberty declined that offer.

The Liberty initially secured home-court advantage for the title game at Barclays Center after securing the better regular-season winning percentage between the teams.

Willie Mays will not be in attendance when the Giants face the Cardinals at Rickwood Field on Thursday in a game honoring him and the Negro Leagues.

Mays, who began his career in Alabama with the Birmingham Black Barons of the Negro Leagues and played for the Giants from 1951-72, told the San Francisco Chronicle that he will enjoy the game at home.

"I'm not able to get to Birmingham this year but will follow the game back here in the Bay Area," Mays said in a statement to the paper on Monday. "My heart will be with all of you who are honoring the Negro League ballplayers, who should always be remembered, including all my teammates on the Black Barons. I wanted to thank Major League Baseball, the Giants, the Cardinals and all the fans who'll be at Rickwood or watching the game."

"It'll be a special day, and I hope the kids will enjoy it and be inspired by it."

Mays, 93, is widely considered baseball's greatest living player. He won the World Series with the Giants in 1954 and was a 24-time All-Star during his career, tied with Stan Musial for second-most behind Hank Aaron's 25. Mays won the 1954 major-league batting title and was voted NL MVP in 1954 and 1965.

RORY TAKES 3 WEEKS OFF

Rory McIlroy took to social media Monday afternoon to say his stunning collapse at the U.S. Open was probably the toughest day of his career, and that he would take off the next three weeks to "build myself back up."

That means he will skip the Travelers Championship, the final $20 million signature event on the PGA Tour schedule with a limited field and no cut.

"The one word that I would describe my career as is resilient," McIlroy said in his post. "I've shown my resilience over and over again in the last 17 years and I will again."

McIlroy twice had a one-shot lead at Pinehurst No. 2 until he closed with three bogeys in his last four holes, missing a 30-inch par putt on the 16th hole and a par putt from just inside 4 feet on the 18th hole.

Bryson DeChambeau won it with a sensational par on the 18th, hitting a 55-yard bunker shot to 4 feet for par to beat McIlroy by one shot. McIlroy became the first player since Jim

MILES SUING LSU

Les Miles, who coached the LSU Tigers to a 2007 national championship, is suing the university over its decision to vacate 37 of his teams' victories between 2012 and 2015.

The lawsuit filed Monday in federal court in Baton Rouge alleges that LSU never gave Miles a chance to be heard before altering the coach's career record significantly enough to disqualify him from consideration for the College Football Hall of Fame.

"Les was given no right to be heard, or even advance notice of LSU's actions, despite LSU being a state-owned and state-run institution that is bound by constitutional safeguards," Miles' lawyer, Peter Ginsberg, said in a statement.

The decision in June 2023 to vacate the victories stemmed from an NCAA ruling that former Tigers offensive lineman Vadal Alexander had received financial benefits that violated NCAA rules at the time he played.

GOODSELL DEFENDS 'SUNDAY TICKET'

NFL commissioner Roger Goodell reiterated during testimony in federal court Monday that the league's "Sunday Ticket" package, the subject of a class-action lawsuit, is a premium product while also defending the league's broadcast model.

Goodell was called as a witness by the NFL as the trial for the lawsuit filed by "Sunday Ticket" subscribers entered its third week.

The class-action, which covers 2.4 million residential subscribers and 48,000 businesses who paid for the package from 2011 through 2022, claims the league broke antitrust laws by selling its package of out-of-market Sunday afternoon games at an inflated price.

The subscribers also say the league restricted competition by offering "Sunday Ticket" only on a satellite provider.

The NFL maintains it has the right to sell "Sunday Ticket" under its antitrust exemption for broadcasting. The plaintiffs say that only covers over-the-air broadcasts and not pay TV.

If the NFL is found liable, a jury could award $7 billion in damages, but that number could balloon to $21 billion because antitrust cases can triple damages.

BLUE JACKETS FIRE COACH

The Columbus Blue Jackets on Monday fired coach Pascal Vincent after one season in which they were one of the NHL's worst teams.

New general manager Don Waddell announced the firing and said the search for a new coach would begin immediately.
